ETJ areas challenged again

Potential litigation concerning ETJ still hangs over the Town Board but this time it's about the Horse Cove and Clear Creek areas.

At the April 18 Town Board meeting, commissioners and Town Attorney Bill Coward went into closed session to discuss the ramifications of a letter presented to the board by Planning Board member and Horse Cove resident Mitch Gurganus.

In the letter, Gurganus suggests the town is in violation of Article 19 of the N.C. General Statute and in violation of its own Land Use Plan.

"Article 19 sets out the legal requirements by which a city such as Highlands may exercise extraterritorial jurisdiction stating an ordinance specifying an area to...

Board OKs home business ordinance

The Home Occupation ordinance has been set for a public hearing, but not all commissioners agree with its scope.

Initially, the Planning Board revised the ordinance to address home-based businesses and home occupations in the R1-ETJ areas, but as it developed board members realized there were issues in R1 areas within the town limits, too.

"They realized that the situation in town is similar and everyone was basically turning a blind eye and permitting the businesses to exist," said Interim Town Planner Richard Betz at the April 18 Town Board meeting. "It is their desire to treat everyone the same."

Consequently, the proposed ordinance is for R1 districts in and out of town.

As such, the proposed ordinance would allow home occupations in the R1 districts in town and in the ETJ as well as in the R2, R3, B2, B3, B4 and R4 districts.

"I haven't heard a good enough argument why we should...

Windstorm knocks out Highlands

Weather reports warned of a major change heading Highlands' way by Sunday night, April 15, but no one was prepared for the windstorm that relentlessly buffeted the plateau Sunday through Tuesday.

About noon Sunday, the fog rolled in as temperatures began to drop. Soon the wind picked up, blew out the fog and left in its place winter-like weather complete with snow.

The wind gusts 50-70 mph shaking winter debris from every tree and shrub. For many on the plateau, power went out about 9 p.m. Sunday night and wasn't re-stored until late Monday afternoon or early evening.

Early reports from Duke Power, the source that feeds much of the Highlands Townships' electricity, said power wouldn't be re-

This week has been important for the Board of Commissioners of the Town of Highlands. First, we had a morning retreat at the Mountain Retreat with Robert E. Smith as our facilitator discussing the future of the governance of our town in all aspects.

Currently, the Town has a Mayor-Council type government which is typical for most small towns. The larger the town, the more there is a movement to a Manager-Council governance where the town manager has more authority than the administrator system which we now have.

In our system, the Board of Commissioners must approve all hiring and firing although we usually accept the recommendations of our administrator. The duties of the Mayor remain the same in both systems of governance. The Council sets most of the policies, approves ordinances and oversees the Manager or Council in both systems. At the present time, we have somewhat of a hybrid system somewhere between these two types of governance.

A good discussion between our facilitator and the Board developed in this retreat regarding all levels of governance of boards in general and Town boards in particular. The committee of the board assigned to this task will be going to all department heads and the town administrator for input, and we will review our consultants report from last year on all aspects of town employment and evaluation of positions. In this way, we hope to streamline the governance process of our Town and make the system which we now have even better and more efficient.

After these interviews, study and discussions, we will make the necessary changes to further enhance and streamline our service to the community. We will not know what changes we will make until we have gone through the entire process and come to a consensus.

This week we also began our budget process when the Finance Committee met to begin discussing what we need to put into the budget for the coming fiscal year which begins in July. We will also be working on determining the tax rates for the Town of Highlands. This is a very involved process which will take us a couple months to work through. During the process, we will try to meet with the Macon County Commissioners to work out what funds will come from the county regarding such things as sewage, recreation and landfill funding. The change in the way we handle solid waste in our land-fill will change the first of next year and this could potentially cost the town up to $400,000. We are looking to the county for help with this. We will also continue to look for funding for removal of the sit from our water supply source; the Big Creek Arm of Lake Sequoyah, along with paving some of our gravel roads.

I would like to remind everyone that the governor has declared April 14 through 26 as Spring 2007 Litter Sweep Time. I encourage our citizens to get involved in keeping our pristine Highlands plateau clean, particularly along our streets and byways.

This Saturday morning at nine o’clock folks can pick up the necessary bags and equipment to help with this at the Recreation Park. Supplies are also available at the NC Department of Transportation maintenance office. Notification of DOT of the placement of full bags will get them picked up. Let us all take pride in our community and volunteer to pick up the litter in our area.

The Environmental Health Liaison Committee delivered some good news for those who are anxious about the septic permit backlog that has been plaguing Macon County since last year.

Septic permits are caught up to February with only 50 applications left from that month. According to Barry Paterson, environmental health specialist with the health department, if these can be completed, the department will be on track to meet its goals.

A big jump in fast track applications prompted discussion of the possibility that fast track applications may be illegal if they are receiving preference twice over regular applications. According to some committee members this “would be a tragedy.” The committee won’t know the status of fast tracks for sure until more review can be done.

A jump in pending dient action on applications tied up the department for most of last week. “All I did last week was pending dient action,” said Paterson, who also said the department is interviewing for a seventh person again. “It looks like its going to be a busy summer,” he said.

Paterson expects the department will “break 100 applications a month in April or May.” The amount of applications the department can handle is based on a staff of seven. “With a staff of seven in spring and fall — the slower months — we can keep it to two to three weeks,” said Paterson of the amount of time it’ll take to complete applications. “In summer it’ll be impossible but we could keep it to four to six weeks.”

The complaint level has also dropped according to committee members. Most calls that members received were “inquiries about how things were going.” Some calls were from those who “had no room to complain” and “were just in the dumps.”

The committee also discussed an additional fee for public swimming pools that were not prepared for health department’s annual inspection. The department is tied up this time of year with 100 swimming pool inspections of 45 to 50 pools because the pools are not ready.

The committee voted to approve an additional $50 re-inspection fee for pools on top of the $100 annual fee already in place. The County Commissioners must approve the fee before it applies.

County's septic permitting process on the upswing

Daniel Mathaney Brown III

Daniel Mathaney Brown III, 61, died April 11, 2007 after a courageous battle with cancer. Dan was born on May 4, 1945. He was a loving husband to Pam, a devoted father to Pat, and a proud grandfather to Daniel. Born and raised in Miami, Fl, he moved to Highlands, NC ten years ago.

After graduating from Georgia Southern University and serving in the United States Air Force, Dan returned to Miami with his new family in 1972. He became a residential real estate appraiser with First Federal Savings and Loan and later started his own appraisal business in 1982 with Pam. They moved their appraisal business to Highlands, N.C. in 1997, where Dan continued working until shortly before his death. Dan made many lifelong friends throughout his career both in Miami and in Highlands.

Dan grew up sailing the waters of Biscayne Bay racing Snipe class sailboats with his father and family at Miami Yacht Club. Fishing in South Florida was always on his mind even after moving away from Miami. When not sailing and fishing, Dan devoted endless hours of his time and encouragement to his son’s Khoury League baseball teams.

Dan also loved the mountains of Highlands, NC, which he discovered on his honeymoon in 1966. After 30 years of making it a vacation destination, he started calling Highlands home in 1997. However, it was Dan’s love for fishing that led him back to Miami one last time. He fished for the final time in Flamingo with his son only two weeks before he died.

Dan died where he was born, in Miami, surrounded and loved by his family. He is survived by his wife of 40 years Pamela Dorn Brown, his son Patrick (Jean), and grandson Daniel Ross Brown. Also surviving are his father Robert L. Brown, his five siblings: Bobby, Sue, Linda, Mike and Patty. Dan was predeceased by his mother, Jane T. Brown.

Additionally, Dan is survived by a wonderful and caring extended family and many friends in Fl and NC who loved and supported him during his life and through his illness. Dan’s family is very grateful to his brother-in-law Tom and his sister-in-law Sherrin, who suspended her nursing career in Seattle to help care for Dan throughout his illness. Dan will be missed by all who knew him. He was a gentleman and loved a good laugh.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to Fairchild Tropical Gardens in Miami or The Highlands Land Trust in North Carolina.

The family will accept visitors at Bryant Funeral Home in Highlands on April 21 from 2-4 p.m. Bryant Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.
Honestly, I had forgotten the meaning of nappy until I woke up, turned on the TV and heard all the rant about Don Imus inappropriately using the term on his syndicated show, “Imus in the Morning.” I have been watching the news ever since because what is unfolding is incredible. Iraq war; what Iraq war? Fasten your seatbelts and prepare yourself for a little straightforward police talk from a veteran. For starters, the word “ho” has been around for longer than I was ever a policeman. My black brothers, at least those who were cool, use the term back in my day to describe a whore or trashy woman. Whores were “hos.” No big deal….it was a cultural thing. Then, after I retired, along came Gangster Rap and the word was changed to describe all women, from Mother Teresa to Rosie O’Donnell. In the rap world, if you’re a woman, regardless of your color, you’re a “ho.” The word is repeated thousands of times each day in filthy songs on rap radio stations around the country. Then, along comes Don Imus, who obviously has forgotten he is a white boy wearing a cowboy hat and calls the Rutgers girl basketball team a bunch of “nappy-headed hos.” If that term were included in a rap song and even directed toward the team, it would be cool. Let’s all stand and applaud Imus for getting the dumb-ass award of the year. He engaged his mouth before his brain because he called a nice bunch of athletes a bunch of kooky haired whores. Imus mistakenly thought if Snoopy Dog could sing the word “ho” on the airwaves, he could say it. He didn’t know there’s a separate set of rules for old men with cowboy hats than for those who are cool black dudes with their baseball caps turned sideways.

As a police officer I have heard black people call each other “niggers” in arguments for years. It was common and still goes on today. Even black officers would use the term frequently and get away with it if the setting was appropriate. But a white guy using the “n” word was and is always inappropriate. So is the word “ho.” NBC and CBS for two weeks until advertising money was pulled. Mind you, I am not putting blame on anyone here except Imus. He didn’t shoot himself in the foot; he shot himself in the head. DUH! No….double DUH!

I never liked the show and never watched it so I say good riddance. I find his kind of liberal satire distasteful. That may sound weird coming from a guy who regularly makes fun of, insults and blasts everyone and everything under the sun. I would never attempt to put myself on a par with Don Imus for he is much cleverer than I. But there are similarities in our plights. We both love what we do, don’t do it for the money and would miss it if forced to retire or get fired. We insult and stretch the truth. Someone is usually offended, even though it was just for fun.

Here is something you probably don’t know. Kim Lewicki, my editor, is the bravest lady in Highlands. She takes a lot of heat from what I write. People have pulled their advertising because of comments I have put in print but she lets me write. Major advertisers have threatened to pull all their advertising if specific things were written but I continue to write.

As sure as God made little green apples, the time will come when she will have to fire me. I will inadvertently pull what I now call “an Imus” and she will have no choice but to let me go. Until then, I will continue to do what I do; wake up in the morning and look in the mirror to remind myself I am an old white man who writes satire. Then I’ll sit down and write until the axe finally falls.
Who has the right to bear arms?

“A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed.”

A good many people argue that a gun is important to protect themselves and their families from intruders. I don’t disagree, but I question if given the lethality of assault weapons and their frequent role in mass homicides, perhaps it might be appropriate to require homeowners to protect themselves with weapons with less fire power.

Of course, it is a trade off, but one which seems sane to me. Enough kids are killed by the gun Dad keeps around for protection so each family must decide for itself if the benefit outweighs the risk.

The killings at Virginia Tech, the single worst incident of its kind in American history, are sure to resurrect the gun debate in the United States. At the time of this writing 33 are dead, including the shooter, who apparently committed suicide. Who says that guns don’t kill? I can’t imagine this guy killing more than one or two with a pen knife and a sling shot. I didn’t write that preposterous contrast to insult the memory of those who died, or trivialize the horrible needless loss of life. I did it not to shock you with my insensitivity, but to illuminate the absurdity of the argument. Guns don’t kill. People do.

You can find the second amendment to the United States Constitution above. We don’t hear much about a well regulated militia when the subject arises, only about “the right to keep and bear arms.” If we are talking about a well regulated militia, assault weapons are far more suitable for the task of repelling invaders or rebelling against tyrants. Unfortunately, we learn every day in Iraq what a determined insurgency can do with very little in the way of weaponry.

Most of those who support the National Rifle Association minimize the value of guns as human killing machines and emphasize their importance to the sport hunter and to the preservation of American heritage. It stretches my imagination that a Kalishnakov assault rifle is an important tool for or symbol of either hunting or heritage.

The NRA and its members apparently believe that any weakening of the absolute right to own guns will lead to further erosion, and eventual elimination of the right altogether. I can understand that they would think that is a bad thing.

It is interesting that the right to “bear arms” has been heavily restricted for the past century or so. When was the last time you saw a tourist strolling down Main Street with a six gun strapped to his belt or an M-16 slung over his shoulder? My guess is that he would be an unwelcome guest in Kilwin’s. The right, as provided in the second amendment, is not absolute, but is subject to legislative modification. As I’ve explained, society has severely curtailed the right to bear arms. Permits are required to carry firearms, although gun racks in the rear windows of pick up trucks are still OK. I’ll be honest. I feel safer when I see a carpenter’s level or a fly rod on the rack.

The NRA is a powerful vote-producing machine and contributes heavily to candidates who support unrestricted gun ownership. When Mitt Romney, who supported strict gun control measures as governor of Massachusetts decided to pursue the presidency, he purchased a life-time membership in the NRA and claimed status as a lifelong hunter, despite considerable evidence that his total experience consisted of rabbit hunting as a teenager with his cousins in Idaho and shooting pen raised quail with financial backers last year in Georgia. I think it was John Kerry who showed up for a goose hunting trip with the price tags still on his camo gear. Courting the NRA is not restricted to either party, and candidates of both know that opposition to gun ownership can cost votes and elections. Although a little help from the NRA can deliver victory, assistance more frequently sought by Republicans, while Democrats seek support from the antigun crowd.

The horrible slaughter in Blacksburg confirms the need for balance for our gun control policy. Unfortunately much will be made of the tragedy for a few days, as was the case after the Columbine murders, until the public tires of the story. Then the NRA will mobilize the troops, alternately boosting and threatening candidates until the threat of reform has passed.

There will be another massacre in which “guns don’t kill,” and then another. These murders are especially tragic because they are preventable. But rest confident tonight that we will be well equipped to repel the Chinese invasion. Some of our citizens are already killing invading Mexicans at the border.
Oh no, not again.

Last week I waxed poetic about the beauty of spring just in time to get whacked in the face by the dreaded GLOBAL COOLING! Twenty degrees below normal pretty well ended all the blooming things in my neighborhood. The heading of this column doesn’t refer to my writing on global warming again; you’ll see by the end of it if you last that long.

Let’s flash back to late 2000, when election officials in South Florida were counting and recounting chads, hanging and otherwise, in order to determine the winner of the state electors and the national election. Enter the Florida Supreme Court and finally Katherine Harris, Florida Attorney General who drove the final nail in Al Gore’s presidential coffin.

That was then, this is now. When Gore had gotten over his emotional meltdown following his loss, just like a bad Friday the 13” movie, he rises from the ashes to lead the campaign against global warming. Face it, the subject cannot be discussed without introducing Gore to the conversation. First, he established the previously explained carbon offset trading scam, from which he profits directly.

Next, he produces an alleged documentary which wins him an Oscar from the far-left Hollywood crowd. Even though the film is loaded with distortions, misleading inferences, unmerited hype, blatant demagoguery and just plain erroneous information, it does put Gore, once again, in the forefront of public discourse, a position he seems to covet above all else except possibly money.

Speaking of money, Gore is promoting a series of Live Earth concerts, originally scheduled to be located in all seven continents. Evidently, the events planned for the polar ice caps were moved when someone cautioned that perhaps a couple of thousand personal jets flying several thousand miles to freeze their fannies listening to the Black Eyed Peas might bring an outcry because of the unnecessary emissions. Adding up the admission fees of perhaps several hundred thousand attendees plus television rights, Gore stands to rake in a ton of money.

I’m watching CNBC the other day, where I thought I was safe from such trips, when Laurie David, a producer of “An Inconvenient Truth,” and Cheryl Crow, big time recording artist, were interviewed. These eco-crusaders are going around to many college campuses, propagandizing young minds with their apocalyptic forecasts due to global warming. I still fail to understand why people actually listen to a singer on a subject so difficult to understand that educated scientists can’t agree on it.

I have some questions. Why are the same scientists, who said with certainty in the late 1960s and early 1970s that the world was entering a glacial (or ice) age, now saying we’re toast in a hurry? Among them is the National Academy of Science. Were they wrong then or are they wrong now? Time will tell.

Second, why now? Why is all this haw and cry coming now? Surely the information supporting their theory has been around for a while. After all, the Kyoto fuss occurred in the late 1990s. Why not then? Let’s get out the old pad and pencil and see if we can connect the dots.

Gore is in the public eye - big time. Gore is raising cash and lots of it through his movie, his carbon offset exchanges, his Live Earth concerts and schmoozing with corporate executives such as Jeff Immelt, General Electric’s chairman and CEO.

GE produces many products which would benefit from agreeing that global warming is a threat. There are many other businesses which share GE’s position.

Now if Gore were to have thrown his hat in the presidential ring months ago with the rest of the liberal Dems, what would he be doing? Fighting to get media notice along with Hillary, Obama and the rest of the far-lefties. He would be raising money to finance his campaign. He would be organizing grass roots support for campaign operations (can you say “college students”?). Well, it sure feels to me that Gore is running a stealth campaign and very successfully.

H. L. Menken is quoted as saying “The whole aim of practical politics is to keep the populace alarmed, and hence dangerous to be led to safety, by menacing it with an endless series of hobgoblins, all of them imaginary.” Gore is nothing if not an expert in practical politics and global warming is his first hobgoblin. The one thing he has over the rest of the wannabees is a cause to which...
Freedom of speech

I once heard someone say, “I like to ask people to name the rights guaranteed in the First Amendment to the Constitution. He said most people could only name two or three, rarely did someone know four and almost never did anyone know all five. The rights most people know are freedom of speech, press, and religion. (The other two are the right to assemble peacefully and to petition the government.) All five could be seen as variations on the right to free speech.

I just read a review of a new biography of Albert Einstein and was struck by his opinion of Americans: he admired our informality and our optimism, but most of all our love of free speech. Einstein is quoted as saying, “From what I have seen of Americans, I think that life would not be worth living to them without this freedom of self expression.”

Free speech is a difficult right. It challenges us because we have to fight for the right for people whose speech offends us. When I was attending Northwestern in Evanston (north of Chicago), some Nazis wanted to march through the nearby town of Skokie. Even though everyone knew hated the idea of these men marching, I also remember the cordon of police protecting their sacred right as Americans to express their opinion.

Free speech was under attack almost before the ink had dried on the Constitution. The Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798 made it a crime to “write, print, utter, or publish . . . any false, scandalous, and malicious writing” about the president or Congress.

More recently, the Espionage Act was passed in 1917, just after the U.S. entered World War I, making it a crime to in any way interfere with recruitment by the military. The Act was amended the next year; the following is a part of the addition: “. . . whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully...”

For instance, in the 1980’s he printed a satire of a liquor ad in his magazine. The fake ad featured Rev. Jerry Falwell, the famous evangelist. Falwell sued for libel and the case went all the way to the Supreme Court (you can see the ad at wikipedia.com). Courtesy of Larry Flynt, this country was given a strong Supreme Court ruling protecting the right to criticize public figures written by none other than Chief Justice Rehnquist. The vote was 8-0 (Justice Kennedy recused himself because he was seated on the court after arguments were heard.)

“- At the heart of the First Amendment is the recognition of the fundamental importance of the free flow of ideas and opinions on matters of public interest and concern. The freedom to speak one's mind is not only an aspect of individual liberty—and thus good unto itself—but also is essential to the common quest for truth and the vitality of society as a whole.

“- The sort of robust political debate encouraged by the First Amendment is bound to produce speech that is critical of those who hold public office or those public figures who are ‘intimately involved in the resolution of important public questions or, by reason of their fame, shape events in areas of concern to society at large’ (Justice Frankfurter put it succinctly in Baumgartner v. United States, when he said that “one of the prerogatives of American citizenship is the right to criticize public men and measures.” Such criticism, inevitably, will not always be reasoned or moderate; public figures as well as public officials will be subject to ‘vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks.” www.laws.findlaw.com

"Our government has lied to us many times. Our government has lied us into war more than once. World War I was one of those times. Our government passed a law to put people in prison to prevent the lie from being exposed."

“-Oftentimes when a government lie is first exposed it sounds ‘unreasonable,’ “immoderate,” preposterous. The people who discover the lie are excoriated, denounced, humiliated. Then, after a time, everyone accepts it as obvious. (Watch All the President’s Men for a refresher course on this process during Watergate.)

Free speech can make a person very unpopular. Adlai E. Stevenson Jr. said, “My definition of a free society is one in which it is safe to be unpopular.”

I may be naive but I think when speech is truly free the truth will always win out over lies (eventually).

Unfortunately in our bitterly partisan time people on both sides attack others personally, even call them names just because they don’t like what the other person is saying. Wouldn’t it be nice if we could grow up and stick to the issues?

Einstein is also quoted as saying, “Laws alone cannot secure freedom of expression; in order that every man present his views without penalty there must be a spirit of tolerance in the whole population.”
Before I get into the tribute part of this article, I must apologize for my absence for the past three weeks. I've been battling mononucleosis for the second time in my life, but that's beside the point. I'm glad to be back, now on to the news.

Yesterday, I was out riding around with my father running a few errands when I got the news from my girlfriend, Kelly, that some guy went on a shooting rampage and killed 22 students at Virginia Tech. It hurt badly enough that I wanted to watch the news and find out what happened and why anyone would commit such a heinous act. The information is slowly growing and leaking out into the public, but last night I had one of the sickest feelings in my stomach I have ever felt before. I remember 9/11, I watched CNN throughout the day shaking my head in disbelief yet it did not affect me nearly as bad as this did. The attack in Chapel Hill, which also happened not too long ago, hit closer to home but still didn't hit me hard enough. I knew people who were injured by Mohammed Reza Taheri-azar when he drove the SUV through the Pit on campus, and while I was sad, I didn't cry.

I have no shame in admitting I stayed up for hours last night fighting back tears, sometimes just letting them out because of the pain I felt from other people. I am grateful that none of my friends were injured or killed, but it feels worse knowing that the parents of 32 people will never hear their child's laughter ever again. 32 young men and women will never graduate, and hundreds of thousands of people will mourn their deaths attempting to grasp how one person could coldly murder people he may not have even known. How many families and friends are left to pick up the pieces of their shattered lives? As the names of victims are released, an entire nation, regardless of affiliation, will wait with baited breath until their fears are calmed, or their worst nightmare begins.

As sports fans, or even those who hate sports can comment on this as well, we can do is pray, meditate, and/or keep the families and friends of the victims of this tragedy in our minds and our hearts. I would love to show the rest of the world that regardless of what teams do on the field, we are all still people with compassion and a sense of brotherhood. It has been done before...but I want to see every uniform for the 2007-2008 season have some tribute to the students of Virginia Tech. After all, the students play for the university, the students cheer for their classmates, and the same students become alumni who support future students both on the field and in the classroom. Put a little black stripe with the letters VT on the arm of each uniform, or across one of the shoulders, or even sewn onto the pants or shorts to show that we will never forget.

To everyone affected by this tragedy, my heartfelt condolences to you, your family, and your friends. To the rest of the media, quit attempting to point blame in any and every direction other than at the killer. The killer made the decision to go on the rampage, and right now the only thing that matters is the welfare of those involved. Let them mourn their losses before starting another massacre of the human spirit. Finally, to everyone keep your spirits up. It is very hard to in times like these, but it's time for us to support those in need. And if you're having trouble doing that, just take a look at the following picture. Perhaps it will bring a smile to your face.

God Bless.

be included based upon existing or projected urban development and areas of critical concern to the city as evidenced by official adopted plans for its development.”

Gurganus contends that the statement “officially adopted plans for its development” refers to the town’s Land Use Plan which consistently refers to the Highlands Plateau in its mission statement. “Horse Cove and Clear Creek aren’t on the Highlands Plateau,” wrote Gurganus.

In the “Plateau Governance versus Goal” section of the Land Use Plan, the mission is to protect the Highlands Plateau including the town’s water supply, the natural environment and the highway corridors.

Other goals include identifying areas for future annexation, reduce the potential for high impact development and ensure compatible developments adjacent to the town limits through zoning.

“Since the areas of Horse Cove and Clear Creek included in the town’s ETJ November 2005 decision are not on the Highlands Plateau, these areas are not covered by the town’s Land Use Plan as required by law prior to exercising extraterritorial jurisdiction,” wrote Gurganus.

He also says instead of being adjacent to the town’s limits, Horse Cove and Clear Creek are adjacent to U.S. Forest Service land.

“According to this information, it is my opinion that to extend ETJ and zoning to Horse Cove and Clear Creek violates the statute,” wrote Gurganus.

He said a solution to the violation would be for the town to drop Horse Cove and Clear Creek from ETJ or for the town to adopt a new Land Use Plan with criteria listed for their inclusion.

Commissioners and Coward are considering a formal reply to Gurganus’s letter.

Firm hired to design Town Hall complex

Work will soon begin on a plan for a new Town Hall complex.

At the April 18 Town Board meeting, commissioners agreed to hire the architectural firm of Sorin & Fisher from Asheville.

Phase I and II of the plan will involve a schematic plan based on a recent survey of the plat and interviews with town departments to assess needs.

It’s unknown at this time if the ABC store building or the Town Hall as they now exist will be included in the plan.

Board members agreed to budget $43,800 for the 2007-2008 budget year which will be used for the beginning phases of the project.

“Town Hall isn’t adequate now and it won’t be any better in 10 years,” said Commissioner Amy Patterson.

The first phase of the project should be completed in 90-100 days.

largest provider of prenatal care in the county,” and a large amount of their clientele is Hispanic.
He traced the roots of public health back to the 1800s when a push for clean drinking water initiated efforts to move sewage downstream. “At that time, it was not common knowledge that sewage should be located downstream,” said Polanski.
In North Carolina, public health became a priority because of hookworms. These parasites live in the soil and are excreted by people. “The population of Macon County has changed in the last few years,” said Polanski. “A large percentage of people who are asking for services speak another language. We try to serve equally along with others in Macon County.”
Polanski highlighted three new vaccines which are or will be available soon. The Shingles vaccine will be provided next year for those who are in their sixties. Shingles is a reawakening of chicken pox which causes a severe and painful rash. “It is worth preventing,” said Polanski, since the pain from a Shingles rash can last for months and sometimes years.
The tetanus-diphtheria-pertussis vaccine is being offered as well. Pertussis is whooping cough, and according to Polanski, whooping cough has declined because of vaccinating babies but the vaccine wears off by age 12. When adults and older children contract the disease, it may not be as severe, but it can be passed on to infants and small children if they have not been vaccinated.
The cervical cancer vaccine is available and being provided.
“Early detection is what we have now,” said Polanski. “Prevention is better than detection. Vaccines are always preferable to dealing with infectious diseases.”
A statewide push for more professionalism in public health is also changing the way things are done, according to Polanski. Health departments must now be accredited and measure up to a detailed set of guidelines. The Macon County Health Department expects to receive an inspection by mid to late 2008.

said Lawrence. “73% replied they

The third question asked “How many persons currently live in your home?”
Twenty-seven people said they live alone, 51 people said they have two people living in their home; 35 live with three people; 21 live with four people; and 10 people live in a house with five or more people.
“The average person per household is 2.2 to 2.3 per working family household,” said May-would have been higher.”

Nellis said that may indicate a need for one-bedroom apart-three-bedroom apartments.

The fourth question was “If you currently don’t live in High-

Forty-one people said yes, 44

Next the committee discussed where apartment complexes might be located. Slaughter asked if the town had any suitable prop-

Update From Raleigh

Normally the legislature tends to grab the headlines in Raleigh, especially while we are in session. This week Attorney General Roy Cooper decidedly captured local, state, and national headlines for his announcement about the Duke Lacrosse players. His office had the unenviable task of sorting through a sensitive and very public case that deals with some of the fundamental issues that our society is still seeking to address - namely class and race. We all saw, most of us on the national news, the poised and reasoned approach the Attorney General took.

Cooper's office took the time they needed to work through the facts and check them twice. His announcement was a crystal clear and straightforward presentation of the facts. Cooper did all of us proud in front of the entire nation. While there was most assuredly inappropriate and unethical behavior at the party from which this entire episode stemmed - Cooper was able to get through the haze of the rhetoric surrounding this case and get to the facts on the biggest stage our nation has.

This Week - Medicaid, Mental Health, Carbon Dioxide, Voting, and Barbeque

Medicaid

In addition to death and taxes Benjamin Franklin could have added increases in Medicaid costs to his list of things humans cannot avoid. North Carolina is the last state in the Nation that requires its counties to pay a portion of Medicaid costs. The dramatic increases in health care and through that Medicaid costs many of our counties are being pushed to the very brink of their financial limits. While some of the larger counties such as Wake and Mecklenburg have no problems paying their share of Medicaid costs many of the counties in our district do. Swain County is the best example of a County that cannot afford this bill with over 80% of its land in federal protection and not able to be used for residential purposes it has no chance to gain the needed revenue to pay its Medicaid bill. The 300 counties of North Carolina are projected to spend $517 Million for the non-federal share of Medicaid in 2007-2008. The counties are pushing very hard to make the State take on this burden.

On the other side of this problem, however, is the fact that North Carolina counties do not have to pay for many of the things that other counties have to pay for in other states. The State of North Carolina pays for the roads, schools, and many of the other services that other counties in the other states have to pay for. Given the fact that the state is picking up the tab for all of these services it will not be easy for us to find the money to pay for Medicaid.

The reason to pay for Medicaid is that in smaller but growing counties such as ours there are significant and fundamental needs, such as paying for new sewer lines and other infrastructure that their Medicaid dollars could go to. Our counties need the additional money to provide a high standard of living that is needed to recruit quality and robust businesses and workers. If, by taking the Medicaid burden off the counties, we are able to help counties free up the money they need to invest in themselves and their infrastructure needs, then they ought to be able to achieve a return on investment to justify the additional state expense.

The effort to relieve Medicaid expense from the counties is moving most rapidly through the house in the form of House Bill 1424. Most of the House has signed onto this bill and I think you will find broad support for this measure in both chambers.

Mental Health

The mental health situation in North Carolina is in a pitiful mess. Earlier this week Secretary of Health and Human Services Carmen Hooker Odom announced that the rate for one-on-one services for people with mental illnesses will be cut by one-third. After a tremendous and justifiable outcry from providers of mental health services, the Secretary announced that the cut will be less than what she originally announced but will be retroactive to April 5th. This comes in the face of several independent consultant reports that say that the mental health system needs tremendously more money - not less to fix the system. With that said it seems that the North Carolina Department of Health and Human Services seems unwilling to do what is necessary to truly advocate for the money and infrastructure that is needed to make the program work. This was reflected as much in the Governor's budget while the mental health community languishes.

Mental Health Care is something that is often not talked about when we think and talk about our State Government. However, mental health problems are often treatable and can greatly improve the lives of the people and families who receive this care. Because of a severe lack of leadership that does not encompass crisis management centers and clear performance goals, too many North Carolinians are going without the care they need to make their lives and those of their families better.

Carbon Dioxide

A very disturbing report was released this week using U.S. Department of Energy Data which ranks North Carolina in the top four states for increases in carbon dioxide emissions in the nation. The report states that carbon dioxide emissions grew by 18 percent in the United States during the 14-year period from 1990 to 2004. Though North Carolina did not rank in the top 10 for total carbon dioxide emissions during the period, it did aim the fourth-highest spot for absolute increases in emissions.

According to the report, carbon dioxide emissions increased by 36 percent from 1990 to 2004, twice the national increase. Over that period, North Carolina's carbon dioxide emissions increased more than 39 million metric tons, from 110 MMT in 1990 to 149.2 MMT in 2004. Only Texas, Florida and Illinois recorded larger absolute increases over the 14-year time frame. Emissions from coal-fired plants increased by 52 percent in North Carolina from 1990 to 2004, totaling 69.4 MMT, or about 46 percent of the state's total CO2 emissions that year. North Carolina's transportation also saw significant growth in CO2 emissions, which increased 35 percent from 37.8 MMT in 1990 to 51.1 MMT in 2004. Emissions from motor gasoline consumption gained 30 percent between 1990, when they totaled 28.1 MMT, and 2004, when they topped 36.5 MMT.

While the report links these increases in carbon dioxide with global warming, I feel that there are some more tangible problems that it presents that we need to be concerned about. A number of years ago I traveled to Los Angeles and the one thing that I will never forget about that city is the smog. Smog covers the city and permeates every aspect of life there. Every week when I drive back into the district from Raleigh, I notice that the mountain view just isn't as clear as it used to be. We are also having more folks go to the doctor with Asthma than we were even 10 or 15 years ago. Studies have linked asthma with dirty air.

North Carolina is experiencing a tremendous population boom and this year we are being offered some policy solutions that could greatly impact how much air pollution we allow on a yearly basis. Some of these proposed solutions are going to be controversial but they are the conversation we should have to ensure that we don't lose what is special about North Carolina just because we are trying to grow.

Voting

OnPoint Polling and Research of Raleigh released some numbers that stunned me. Not polling results, but demographics. According to OnPoint, here is how the active voting population of North Carolina breaks down by age:

In other words, only 13 percent of the voters are under 40! That's less of the electorate than people aged 70-79. Nearly two-thirds of all voters (65 percent) are over 50.

Senator Dole representative coming to Franklin April 23

U.S. Senator Elizabeth Dole today announced that a representative from her Western office will hold traveling office hours in Macon County on Monday, April 23, 2-3 p.m. at the Macon County Courthouse Law Library, 4th Floor.

Constituents can use the office hours to hold individual meetings to discuss their concerns with federal agencies, case work, or issues pending before Congress. Appointments are not necessary, but can be scheduled by calling 828-698-3747.

Local inspired in Taos, NM

Cynthia Stacey, aka Thea of the singer-songwriter duo Thea & The Green Man, recently returned from five weeks in Taos, NM where she was “Artist & Writer in Residence.” Having been awarded the residency by the Frank Waters Foundation, Thea wrote essays, poetry, a song, worked on her Creative Non-Fiction Book, “Raven,” and took photographs which she plans to exhibit in Highlands this summer. She stayed in the historic Frank Waters homestead next to Taos Pueblo land at the base of Taos sacred mountain. The Frank Waters Foundation was created by Frank Waters, the Grandfather of Southwestern Literature, and his wife, Barbara Waters for the purpose of preserving Frank’s work and home as a museum, and to nurture the creative spirits of artists and writers who are selected through a qualifying process for the residencies.

Thea not only produced a volume of work to fulfill her residency, she also performed live and was interviewed on KTAO, the largest solar powered radio station in the world, to promote her new CD, “My Mother’s Garden.” Her husband, Chuck, aka The Green Man, Willhide was able to spend a week with her exploring the Southwest frontier and the sustainable technologies being developed in the area from wind power to off-the-grid earthships. Developer Dick Lawrence showed committee members the affordable housing complexes he built in the Caribbean for $101 a sq. ft. using alternative building materials.

Frequent survey responses revolved around the cost of living in Highlands. “The price of living in general is too high – groceries, restaurants, gas, etc.,” wrote respondents. “There is no place to shop for what is needed – even to buy a pair of Levi jeans.”

Wages are considered too low by respondents. “I believe salaries need to be increased to make it worthwhile to tinkle the mountain roads, time and distance for jobs. Wages don’t meet the cost of living in Highlands,” said some.

Child care was a big issue and prompted the committee to consider offering child care in the proposed apartment complexes.

“Child care is difficult to find and overpriced. Child care needs to be flexible and affordable open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.,” wrote respondents.

Sloan said the operation and construction of child care centers is extremely difficult but family care providers – where people care for children in their homes – might be a better scenario. She said even though home facilities have to be licensed it would likely be less expensive alternative to formal child care centers.

Property taxes were a big issue. “Recent increases in county taxes certainly hasn’t helped. Middle income families suffer the most in Highlands. Property taxes are high. This affects those of us who do own homes,” wrote some.

The committee also discussed requiring developers to set aside funds or a percentage of their sites for moderately priced housing.

Members also discussed a multiple listing for rental apartments and houses in Highlands to ensure rentals were safe and in a well maintained condition.

Nearly all respondents said entertainment and community activities were lacking. “It’s too far to drive to enjoy any activities,” said others. “There is nothing to do and Highlands is forever away from everything.”

Committee members discussed the old landfill property – not to be confused with the landfill now in operation – both on Rich Gap Road. Supposedly, there’s an 80-acre tract owned by the county, much of which was never used as a landfill.

Mullen suggested talking to the county about available county land. He also said there is a 30-40 acre private parcel which has been offered by an organization, “but the offer isn’t solid yet,” he said.

Volunteers are key for Highlands-Cashiers Hospice Program

Volunteers with Highlands-Cashiers Hospice play a vital role in touching the lives of those who are facing the end of life, and the organization is taking time during National Volunteer Week this week to say thank you to them, and to encourage others to become part of the program.

“We are honoring our Hospice volunteers because they give selflessly of themselves to provide comfort and support to those nearing the end of life’s journey,” said Monica Crook, RN, director of the local Hospice program, which is a part of Highlands-Cashiers Hospital. “These volunteers are the faces and hands of caring.”

Hospice volunteers regularly visit patients, read to them, talk with them, even sing and pray with them. They also provide brief respite for family members who are primary caregivers, and even run errands for those who are homebound. To be a Hospice volunteer requires a serious commitment. Volunteers must undergo special training, but perhaps the most important quality is just being a good listener.

“I think being good listeners is one of the most important things we do as volunteers,” says Hospice volunteer Patsy Mullen. “It’s about being able to listen. Letting people tell their stories. Finding as many ways as we can to bring quality of life to the time they have left. It’s all about bringing joy.”

And the rewards come back around. “We go to make them feel better and they always end up making us feel better,” she adds.

The organization is coming off what is perhaps its busiest year ever. It served 32 patients and their families last year, providing nearly 1,100 days of service. Volunteers are part of the team that includes nurses, a dietitian, a social worker, a member of the clergy, a medical director, and bereavement counselors, among others. The goal is not to hasten death, nor to prolong life, but to create a loving, secure, and peaceful environment for the last months of a precious life.

Highlands-Cashiers Hospital began offering hospice services to residents of southern Macon and Jackson Counties more than six years ago, when it took over Hospice of Macon County. Highlands-Cashiers Hospice is fully accredited and licensed and has a tradition of compassionate care.

More volunteers are always needed. Anyone wishing to become a volunteer should contact Highlands-Cashiers Hospice at 526-1402 or they can email hospice@hchospital.org.

Earth Day to feature special guests

This Saturday, April 21, Highlands and Cashiers will celebrate the third annual Earth Day in the Mountains at the Village Green in Cashiers from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. The event will feature live music from local favorites, food and games, in addition to information booths from local businesses and nonprofit organizations.

The 2007 event will also feature a special new addition. A 10-week-old black bear cub will be making an appearance alongside several other wild critters from the Ellijay Wildlife Rehabilitation Sanctuary. The cub, named Glimmer, was rescued after hunters killed her mother. At just a few weeks old, she was unable to survive by herself in the wild. Due to state law that prevents the release of rehabilitated bears back into the wild, Glimmer will be a permanent resident at Ellijay Wildlife Rehabilitation Sanctuary, along with five other bears-in-residence.

The black bear cub will provide a unique opportunity for folks to get close to such a wild and elusive animal that is so prevalent in our area. “We are hoping to educate people about the threat that humans play in the existence of bears in our area. After meeting Glimmer you can’t help but have a renewed appreciation of the wildness of these animals,” says Katy Calloway, one of the event organizers.

In addition to Glimmer, EWRS will bring a lynx, a screech owl, an opossum, and other small mammals and reptiles. The Ellijay Wildlife Rehabilitation Sanctuary’s participation in Earth Day is made possible by McKee Properties in Cashiers.

The animals will be at the Village Green from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. There will be an educational program about Glimmer and the other animals beginning at 1 p.m.

Taylor said there was one non-emergency surgery scheduled, but the patient canceled. The emergency room had a relatively busy day but there were no major problems there. “All in all, we didn’t have any major issues. We keep 20,000 gallons of fuel on hand, enough to run the generators for three to five days with backup plans to get more fuel on short notice if need be,” said Taylor.

The hospital kitchen was only partially functional but the staff kept everyone fed with a few menu changes on short notice. Highlands School didn’t have power, but Principal Brian Jetter opted for a two-hour delay on Monday combined with an early dismissal at 11:30 a.m.

School rooms, though darker than usual, were lit with natural light pouring through the bank of windows that line each classroom.

“If we didn’t have school, we would have had to have school on Memorial Day and I thought a delay and early dismissal would be less disruptive than taking away a family holiday,” he said.

Jetter said if the buses run, the school day counts. With the help of buses and parents, most students made it to school by 10 a.m. Monday. However, no one will be penalized for being absent or for having a tardy Monday, said school Administrator Assistant Judy Smart.

Without power in town or in the township, Main Street was like a ghost town all of Monday. However, though dark and minimally operational, Bryson’s Food Store was open as usual. Employees escorted patrons around with flashlight.

Fred Alexander, with Duke Power, said by 8 a.m. Monday, about 4,200 customers were without power because of the high winds that began in the Nantahala Area late Sunday.

By late Monday afternoon, service was restored to more than half of Duke customers and service was restored to most Nantahala area customers by midnight Tuesday.

“The exception was the Cashiers area in southern Jackson County where the estimated time of restoration was midnight Wednesday,” he said. “Many Cashiers homes were in somewhat isolated areas and more than half are unoccupied summer homes.”

During the height of the windstorm Sunday night, Cashiers rescue crews were...

he and he alone is the chief advocate.
What would Gore’s administration (God forbid) look like? He would push a “solution” to global warming in the form of a regulatory agenda that will amount to more taxes and new restrictions on our energy consumption. His agenda is so severe that he calls for the ban on incandescent light bulbs. For American families, this means higher home energy costs and paying the same inflated gas prices that European nations face.
For American industry these restrictions will cost hundreds of thousands of jobs while countries like China that don’t subscribe to these strict policies take up the slack. He also would call for a moratorium on coal-fired power plants. With some states receiving over 90% of their energy from coal, this would devastate our economy and threaten to create a modern-day energy crisis.

Is Gore in it only for the money? I doubt it. If you see him losing some of his girth in the next few months, you can take his running to the bank. He’s so clever he could probably get the nomination as his present bloated self. Al Gore running again? Oh no, not again. As for me, I’m checking out New Zealand really seriously. Stay tuned.

MC schools salute volunteers

In observance of National Volunteer Week, Macon County Schools recognizes and honors their volunteers who make a huge difference in the lives of students. The 2007 national theme is “Inspirational By Example” because it truly reflects the power volunteers have to inspire the people they help, as well as, to inspire others to serve.

On average, volunteers all over the Macon County School System contribute over 190 hours of service each day. This equals approximately 23 extra staff people or two extra full-time persons at each school, helping to build walking tracks, teaching students to learn to read, helping in the lunchroom, and fundraising.

Volunteer hours contributed on average to a Macon County student since August 2006 is over 6 hours per child.

Since the beginning of the school year last August, over 27,000 hours have been recorded. For the 2005-2006 school year, over 35,000 hours were recorded. “For the last three years, we have averaged over 38,500 hours annually,” stated Jones. “I’m excited to see what our total will be this year. With the school budget the way it is, this is a very cost-effective way to provide one-on-one support to our students.”

Volunteer hours are also used as an in-kind match when the school system is pursuing extra revenue through grants.

Duties of volunteers in the Macon County School System are varied and include teaching art, helping with the fluoride rinse program, shelving library books, and reading to and tutoring students. Many volunteers help outside the classroom by organizing and attending PTO meetings, working with coaches and teachers to support educational efforts.

Volunteers are welcomed whether they can give once a week, daily or for a special event.

Volunteers are an important and necessary resource whose real impact cannot be measured. Volunteers for proctoring the state End of Grade and End of Course tests. If you are interested, please contact Jennifer Jones at 524-4414 x 324 or any Macon County school.

called to a home where a man was stuck on his roof. He had climbed up there to secure something, the ladder blew away and when the crews got there, he was hanging on to the weather vane for dear life.

Outage estimates were: Cherokee County — 60; Graham — 34; Jackson — 2,156 (2,138 in the Cashiers area); Macon — 1,500; and Swain — 450.

Additional Duke and contractor crews from Georgia, Alabama, and SC helped with restoration.

Town personnel at Town Hall fielded countless calls about outages including reports of downed trees and lines. Mayor Don Mullen said since the town relies on Duke for its power there is little it can do if the problem lies with Duke, but Town Engineer Lamar Nix said the town had problems, too.

His crews responded to well over 100 calls and as of Monday night, logged 450 man-hours. “That’s a lot of man-hours in a short amount of time,” he said. “When the problem was with the feed to us from Duke we couldn’t fix it, but at times we couldn’t turn it on because we’d get something fixed and another tree would fail,” he said.

Town crews were seen all over the place righting poles lashed by the wind, restraining sagging lines and removing downed trees long into the night Monday. Even after some power was restored, the wind kept blowing and trees kept falling.

One major Highlands-area problem was caused by a Duke pole that fell on Shortoff Road 13½ miles from the power station. Duke solicited help from Franklin crews to handle the job.

Approximately 130,000 customer outages remained through Wednesday in Duke Energy’s service area in the Carolinas due to Monday’s windstorm.

More than 217,500 customers experienced power outages at the peak Monday night as wind gusts from 40 to 60 miles per hour swept through the Carolinas. Severe damage from the storm resulted in uprooted trees, broken utility poles and downed power lines.

Duke Energy crews from the Carolinas and Midwest, assisted by over 800 additional personnel from outside the company’s service area, continue to assess the damage to the electrical system and restore power as quickly and safely as possible. The storm caused a total of 416,000 customer outages.

U.S. Representative, NC-11

We recently marked the end of the first 100 days of the 110th Congress. Those first 100 days proved quite busy in the House of Representatives. We have passed close to 100 bills, returned fiscal responsibility to our budgeting process, and have begun to restore accountability and transparency to our government.

We have been able to pass bills that have raised the minimum wage for the first time in nearly a decade; cut the interest rates for student loans to help more young people attend college; allowed the Secretary of Health and Human Services to negotiate lower drug prices for America’s seniors; and strengthened our nation’s security against terrorist attacks.

While in the House, we have passed legislation giving over $1 billion in tax cuts for American workers; and adding alternative energy; protecting the rights of workers; and adding transparency to the process of Congressional earmarks.

We in the House await action on many of these initiatives by our colleagues in the Senate. Americans should know that the days of “Do-Nothing” Congresses have ended. We have much left to do in the coming weeks and months, but this Congress is working as hard as the families we represent.

Over the past two weeks I have had the opportunity to travel throughout the 11th District and meet with many residents. During that Spring District Work Period, Western North Carolina was struck by several days of freezing temperatures that destroyed many of the crops in Henderson County, and across the region. Assisting our farmers and ensuring they have the resources they need to persevere through difficult times will be a main focus of mine in the coming weeks. I have already sent a letter to President Bush asking for him to assist our farmers. Governor Easley has requested the North Carolina State Emergency Board to submit U.S. Farm Service Agency Potential Natural Disaster Damage Assessment Reports, to assist and avoid any delay in evaluating a disaster designation request.

I will continue looking for other ways to assist our farmers.

Macon County to sponsor blood drives May 15 & 16

The American Red Cross urges residents in the Macon County area to donate blood. All blood types are needed at this time.

Because blood can be separated into three components—red cells, plasma and platelets—a single donation can save up to three lives. In the more than 100 area hospitals served by the American Red Cross, pre-mature babies, accident victims and patients with cancer or recovering from surgery need approximately 1,500 units of blood or blood products each day.

Eligible blood donors must be at least 17 years of age, weigh a minimum of 110 pounds and be in general good health. Donors must have a form of positive identification in order to donate.

The Franklin Community will sponsor an American Red Cross blood drive at First Baptist Church of Franklin, located at 69 Iotla Street in Franklin, NC. Call Joe Susternak at 369-9559 for more information or to schedule an appointment. All presenting donors can enter a drawing for a trip to Disney World!

The Holly Springs Community is sponsoring an American Red Cross blood drive on Wednesday, May 16 from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m. The blood drive will be held at Holly Springs Baptist Church, located at 366 Holly Springs Church Road in Franklin, NC.

... WINDSTORM from pg 16

During the recent severe wind storm which resulted in power outages throughout our area, our Public Works Department worked many overtime hours in repairing the damages caused by the storm locally. One of the Duke Power main lines which serves most of our town from outside our county was taken down and it took them many hours to repair it. All of these workers are to be commended for the long hours and outstanding job which was done in bringing conditions back to normal in a reasonable time.

Ethical Culture Fellowship to begin May 4

A new religious fellowship is being formed in Highlands, to be known as the Ethical Culture Fellowship. Ethical Culture is affiliated with the American Ethical Union. Proposed meetings will be 10:30-11:30 a.m. on Fridays, with lunch following the meeting. Part of the reason for selecting Friday is so people can participate in this fellowship while also being a member of another religious body.

The service will begin with the lighting of the candle to set this time apart for reflection and sharing. There are brief readings and music, followed by a sharing of our joys and sorrows. After sharing, the group will focus on the selected topic for discussion. The service will conclude with short readings and music.

Ethical Culture was organized about 140 years ago in America as a religion without God that focuses on the ethical problems of society. There are no creeds, no scriptures, only a common commitment to the worth and dignity of all living beings. Ethical Culture is inspired by the ideal to create a more humane society.

The organizing committee is composed of Elinor Artman (Artraven@aol.com), Carole Light (carolelight@hotmail.com), the late Alex Redmountain, and Frisay and Creighton Peden. Anyone is invited to participate in these services, which begin on May 4 at Frisay and Creighton's home at 295 Bonnie Drive.

Ethical Culture is a Humanist and Ethical movement inspired by the ideal that the supreme aim of life is to create a more humane society.

It stands for separation of church and state. It believes acting morally does not require belief in a god. It places faith in the demonstrated capacity of people to do wonderful things. It believes in the worth and dignity of all living beings. Ethical Culture is inspired by the ideal to create a more humane society.

Encore performance of ‘Parallel Lives’ May 4 & 5

Brought Back by Popular Demand!

Call Now to reserve your seats.

The Instant Theater presents the The Highlands Community Players production of ‘Parallel Lives,’ by Kathy Najimy and Mo Gaffney, directed by Mary Adair Leslie

Beginning in 1991 HBO presented “The Kathy and Mo Show” based on the successful off-Broadway shows by the same name. Written and performed by Kathy Najimy and Mo Gaffney, Parallel Lives, while taking the time to celebrate the joys of relationships, never takes itself too seriously.

Originally performed by these two talented actors, Highlands Community Players takes advantage of its bank of talent and features Katie Cochran, Bonnie Earman, Jenny King, Mary Adair Leslie, Lee Lyons, Nancy Reeder, Jennifer Royce, Breta Stroud, Ronnie Spilton, and Sandie Trevathan.

Tackling such subjects as religion, death, diversity and dating the play is for adult audiences as it contains mature language and adult content.

Call the Instant Theatre Box Office to reserve your tickets at 342-9197. Performances begin at 8 p.m.

PseudoCube©

#AZ1A

THE SETUP:
The cube has 27 consecutive numbers in it, arranged in three layers with 9 numbers each. These numbers are arranged in a special pattern: For each layer, the sum of the three numbers in each row, column or diagonal, is 3 times its center number. Eight diagonals connect all 3 layers by running through the center number of the middle layer. Each diagonal contains 3 numbers equalling the total of the three center numbers. One of the diagonals is shown with circles.

THE CHALLENGE:
Start with the three center numbers for each layer and two other numbers. Now pour a cup of coffee, pick up a pencil and eraser and try to figure out where the other 22 numbers belong. Good Luck!

The first correct solution emailed earns a coupon for a FREE cup of coffee from Buck’s Coffee Cafe on Main Street.
