County has plans for ‘room tax’ funds

The county’s budget message, which was presented to the commission at its May meeting, lays the groundwork for many changes coming to Macon County.

At the June 4 Public Work meeting, committee members hashed out stormwater control priorities as outlined in the “Stormwater Master Plan – 2007” formulated by civil and environmental engineers McGill Associates.

With mandatory state requirements concerning stormwater controls coming down the pike, the master plan serves as a necessary tool for securing Clean Water Management Trust Funds.

The price tag of the 21 projects outlined in the master plan costs anywhere from $20,000 to $6 million, so utilizing outside sources of funding is a must. “Most of the projects are huge,” said Town Engineer Lamar Nix. “They go way beyond the means of our budget.”

Town Administrator Richard Betz said getting the plan was dependent on the process. “The need to go to the Clean Water Management Trust Fund wants to see is an opportunity to move forward.”

Stormwater controls a link to park & Greenway

What do the Pine Street Park, the Greenway and the town’s Stormwater Master Plan have to do with each other? Evidently, a lot.

County not releasing rec park funds

The recreation funds promised Highlands at the May Macon County Commission meeting will be held up a bit longer.

At the end of last month’s meeting, the commission agreed to release the remaining $425,000 — not the $500,000 Highlands expected — with an explanation.

During 2006-2007 budget year, the county allocated $100,000 for the Pine Street Park and bought property to expand parking at Zachary Field for $150,000. The amount of $425,000 is what’s left of the $675,000 in recreational funds earmarked for Highlands.

Meanwhile, since the county and the town “read” the contract regarding the county’s disbursement of recreation funds agreed to the winter of 2006 differently, Chairman Charlie Leatherman said no further funds for recreation would be released for Highlands until the contract is “crystal clear.”

Commissioner Jim Davis suggested the confusion might be in the way the contract was drawn up by the previous attorney.

Consequently, Commissioner Leatherman asked County Attorney Lesley Moxley to review the contract and report back to the board.

Since that meeting, Moxley has reviewed the contract and determined it isn’t legally binding and instructed the county finance officer to withhold the $425,000.

Codes amended for ETJ

At Wednesday night’s meeting, the Town Board amended the Zoning Ordinance and the Highlands Code to formalize current practices concerning both the structure of the Zoning and Planning boards as they pertain to Extra Territorial Jurisdiction (ETJ) representation and matters before those boards.

“These are technical amendments for determining the formulae verifying what is already in place since ETJ was enacted,” said Town Attorney Bill Coward.

First, the Zoning Ordinance was amended to say that the board will consist of five members appointed for three-year terms. All members appointed as representatives of any ETJ area, neither for regular or to fill the vacancies of any unexpired term, shall be appointed pursuant to NC G.S. 160A-362.”

A point of contention is exactly what the General Statute (G.S. 160A-362) states concerning which entity appoints ETJ members to municipal boards – the county or the town.

The Town is in litigation with the county over the matter. The lawsuit was a result of a contract to release the remaining $425,000 in recreational funds.

On dealing with the beast within

Dear Editor,

I am reading “Dealing with the Beast Within, Part 2” in last week’s issue of Highlands’ Newspaper, written by Nancy Welch. Not only does she take the edge off of a treatment I have not experienced but she is helping me understand what people are going through who are in treatment. Her sense of humor about “the bathroom wall” was an acceptance of what to expect. God Bless you and I look forward to your next article, and of course your way back to good health. I bet you are proud of your straight grey hair! I am.

Chamber explains Pine Street Park survey

Dear Editor,

The Chamber of Commerce would like to respond to Hillrie Quinn’s letter-to-the-editor in the May 31 issue of this paper.

We would like to commend Mr. Quin for making an excellent summation of the options presented at the May 7 public meeting and the Chamber fully supports the Pine Street Park Committee’s efforts to seek the community’s opinions on the park’s design.

Likewise, the Chamber of Commerce urges everyone interested in the Pine Street Park to attend the second public meeting on Thursday, June 7 at the Highlands Community Building.

Mr. Quin accurately stated that the Chamber surveyed its members about the potential loss of parking spaces that may result from the development of the Pine Street Park. Given the sensitivity of the subject of Highlands’ available parking, the Chamber believes it has an obligation to seek its member’s opinions on the subject and we did so via a private email survey to seek its member’s opinions on the park’s design.

To the seniors, we applaud you for outstanding leadership on and off the court and field. We send our love and prayers with you as you begin a new adventure in your life.

To the rising athletes, keep those friends in your hearts and learn from their examples of leadership and dedication.

Thanks for the memories and we’re looking forward to the upcoming athletic seasons. We love you.

Miracles do happen!

Dear Editor,

Not only is it a miracle how fast Jason is recovering, it is a miracle how many people are sending their prayers and support. For those who do not know, Jason Woods was admitted to St. Joseph’s Memorial, in Asheville, for 13 days with kidney failure, then transferred to Wake Forest Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem. He stayed there for only three short weeks, when doctor’s were expecting him to be there for three months. Jason is now at home with so much determination to get better, it is inspiring! He still has recovering to do, along with many more trips to the doctor, but I have no doubt that someone is watching over him, and he will be protected throughout the long journey ahead.

On Saturday, June 2, a motorcross race benefit was held for Jason in Fairplay, SC. The turnout was amazing! I want to say thank you, on behalf of Jason and his family, to everyone for their support with this event! All donations were very much appreciated! A special thank you to Lenny Metrick with Bountyland Quick Stop, Henry Hunter with Bryson’s Food Store, and Kevin Ledford with Frito-Lays! You do not know how much your help meant to Jason and his family. Thanks to everyone who continues to show support by leaving donations in the jars around town! Thanks for all donations made through local churches and First Citizen’s Bank. Thanks to everyone who continue to keep Jason and his family in your prayers.

For those of you who do not believe,

It’s about HS pride and service

At the June 4 Awards Ceremony at Highlands School, Monday morning, the 2007 “Highlander Pride Award” was awarded to senior Craig McCall for going far beyond what was “expected” and for completing what was “asked” and “even more.”

This year’s Highlander Service Award” was given to Highlands United Methodist Church Pastor and PTO President Kim Ingram, for being consistently supportive of Highlands School throughout the years. With them is HS Principal Brian Jetter.

Dateline – Everywhere in Italy:

You probably already know if you tie Italians’ hands behind their backs, they are unable to speak….but did you know if you tape their mouths shut they can still wave their arms about? I found this out the hard way on the fourth day of my visit to Italy when, to get some peace and quiet, I taped my guide’s mouth shut. Whoa, can that girl wave her arms. Evidently, the nerve endings that control arm waving operate independently of the tongue nerves. More study is needed.

In Rome, there are no traffic rules. Even worse, Italians drive around holding their cell phones in one hand while waving the other around as they speak. They steer with their knees. After years of driving like this, little red bumps form. This condition is called “kneesles” and most Italians suffer from it. Could I make this up?

While in Rome, I swung by the Vatican to have a little chit chat with Pope Benedict about the poor manner in which his bishops are handling scoundrel priests. His Holiness learned I was coming and packed his stuff for Brazil, land of naked priests. Oops, I mean naked parades. I demanded to see an underling and after much haggling, I was granted an audience with Father Lino Facchinetti, a stubby little guy wearing a brown robe with 14 feet of matching rope belt that did a poor job of holding in his gut. Everyone seems to be eating well at the Vatican.

The good Father was a patient man and listened to my grievances. When I was finished, he put his hand on my shoulder and asked, “Why are you Americans still in Iraq?” Did I mention that Father Facchinetti runs the book store in the basement of the Vatican?

Later, the little missus drug me up 551 steps to the top of Saint Peter’s dome. Near the top, the stairway narrowed to 18 inches and leaned sharply to the right. The same engineers who designed the Pisa tower may have had a hand in making this staircase. At the top we were greeted by hundreds of Italian pigeons who seemed puzzled at our arrival….then they pooped on us.

This next report is embarrassing, but a reporter’s gotta do what he’s gotta do. I know some of my regular readers think I am already too tacky but this must be revealed. The word Italy is derived from the Greek word Italia. This word, loosely translated, means “Land of the little penis.” I know this to be true because from the north shores of Lake Maggiore to the southern tip of the boot, there are literally thousands of sculptors, statues, tapestries, paintings, etc., of strong while looking Italian males standing naked exposing their eensy beensy penises. Can you say “eensy beensy Italian penis” three times real fast. Is that fun or what?

In Verona, not too far from Juliet’s balcony, we dined in a small café and right next to our table was a statute of a little boy holding a flower. His penis was about six inches from my left ear….very disconcerting.

I am not sure why this culture is so proud of their male’s shortcomings (ha) but during my 16 day trip, I did not see one single “bubba” sculptor in the group. This has given me a much different perspective of seemingly macho male Italians and I find myself feeling sorry for them….even sorrier for the women.

Finally, you already know from a past column that I came to Italy to get a handle on global warming for Al Gore and Chicken Little. You’re not going to believe this. Mamma Mia, there are 57 million Italians crammed into an area the size of New Mexico. Add to that several million tourists, 60 trillion pooping pigeons, loads of heavy breathing and you can see why there’s a huge cloud of carbon dioxide over this country.

Wait, there’s more. Over half the country’s Italians are puffing away on cigarettes and the average Italian thinks recycling has something to do with bikes. On a city bus I spoke with a local and asked him about the lack of interest in global warming. He said, “We leave that kind of foolishness for the Americans. By the way, why is your army still in Iraq?”

On my last night in Italy, I sat in my hotel bathroom and wrote on the wall, “Attention Italian women. For a good time, come to America.” I couldn’t help myself.

Have you read Fred’s book, I’m Moving Back to Mars?
Scientists talk of multi-dimensional reality. Religious folk talk about angels or spiritual beings that exist on another plane of existence. Other people talk about higher levels or dimensions of consciousness.

Atheists and skeptics scoff when they hear this talk about a reality or realities separate from the concrete matter we can touch. Where are these other dimensions? Where are these angels? Where is heaven?

Our western philosophical and religious traditions lead us to think that the physical and the spiritual are two completely separate entities. There is the gross material and the ethereal spirit, the sins of the flesh and the purity of the spiritual. We are convinced that if there is something spiritual it can't have any connection to this physical reality, but somehow the realm of the spirit can interact with the physical in some miraculous and inexplicable way.

Scientists have some bizarre theories about other dimensions. For example, string theory, a popular branch of physics, postulates 10 or 11 dimensions of spacetime (or 26 or...).

Hyperspace, a book about string theory, explains that the reason we can't perceive these other dimensions of reality is because they are really, really small — the higher dimensions must be curled up into some tiny space smaller than our measuring devices can detect.

Could there possibly be some other (simpler) explanation?

Flatland: A Romance of Many Dimensions is a short novel published in 1884 by Edwin Abbott. Mr. Abbott provides a very useful way to imagine how other dimensions can exist by creating a two-dimensional society called “Flatland.” [Read Flatland online: http://www.alcyone.com/maylit/flatland/]

The creatures in Flatland live only in two dimensions of space, like the surface of the newspaper. Their entire universe is in that flat surface. Flatlanders are different shapes defined by lines: circles, squares, triangles, etc. One of the Flatlanders travels to a new world where there is only one dimension — all the creatures are straight lines — and he sees how these Linelanders can't comprehend him because they only see a part of his dimensionality. They see his movements as magic.

This experience allows Flatlander to see that a great mystery in his life can be explained by the addition of a third dimension to space.

To understand Flatland, try this experiment: Cut a piece of plastic out of a drink bottle, any shape you like. Fill a bowl halfway with water, and drop the plastic on the water so it floats. The plastic is your Flatlander, and the surface of the water is Flatland.

Now stick your thumb and finger into the water, on either side of Flatlander. Move your thumb and finger together and apart and imagine what Flatlander would think about the movement: “There are two circles (because all he can perceive is what is in his flat plane) moving in a coordinated fashion even though there is no apparent connection between them.” If he's scientific, he'll try and come up with a theory; a causal link to explain the coordination.

Now try this: point your index finger and dip it repeatedly into the water, lifting it out of the water each time. What would Flatlander make of this? “A circle is magically appearing and disappearing.”

Try a third trick: stick your first and second fingers into the water joined together, now move them apart to form an inverted V. Flatlander will think, “an oval has split into two separate circles that are moving apart and yet are still somehow communicating.”

What you can see from this experiment is that the world of three-dimensional space would not be perceivable to Flatlander, even though he is living in it.

The third dimension of space that he cannot perceive is not something other than the two that he is familiar with, it is not curled up in some tiny space because he cannot measure it.

In the novel Flatlander can't see the third-dimension because his worldview, which insists there are only two dimensions, screens it out of his consciousness. When he is somehow opened up to the existence of the third-dimension, then it is there to experience just as big and full as the two dimensions he had known before.

I believe that in the same way these higher dimensions are there around us right now, as full and big as the four (three space plus time) that we know.
Food for Thought

I have to admit I’m puzzled by the relationship between people and food in this country. Here are a few of my reflections.

Why do people go to “All You Can Eat” buffets, but most of them seem to be on diets? Wouldn’t it make more sense to just limit the amount of food you take in?

In all honesty, I can’t say I’ve had that many marvelous meals at those buffets. Most of the time, the food is either cold or overcooked anyway.

Why do people insist on eating such large portions of meat? I’ve never lived in another country where you can order a steak by how much it weighs. There’s something obscene about seeing someone with a piece of steak which is so huge it is hanging over the side of their plate.

My mother has a wonderful expression for this, which comes from the times when she took us to the zoo, and we saw lions and tigers fed whole carcasses of cows. When she sees someone with an enormous steak on their plate, she leans over, and whispers, “Feeding time at the zoo.”

Why can’t people correctly pronounce “Worcestershire” sauce? It’s not pronounced “War-chester-shire” it’s pronounced “Wooster.” Watch British Nigel Lawson on the Food Channel. After all, do we say “Mary-land” for Maryland? Of course not!

Sometimes things aren’t pronounced the way they are spelled. “Houston” is pronounced three different ways, depending on whether it’s the town in Texas, the one in Scotland, or the street in New York City. Trust me on this one.

Why do people insist on calling a pain au chocolat a chocolate croissant? A croissant is a French pastry which is crescent shaped. While its origins are not certain, here’s the popular story, according to the Larousse Gastronomique:

“Croissant...This delicious pastry originated in Budapest in 1686, when the Turks were besieging the city. To reach the centre of the town, they dug underground passages. Bakers, working during the night, heard the noise made by the Turks and gave the alarm. The assailants were repulsed and the bakers who had saved the city were granted the privilege of making a special pastry which had to take the form of a crescent in memory of the emblem on the Ottoman flag.”

—Larousse Gastronomique, Jenifer Harvey Lang, editor [Crown/New York] 1988 (p. 338)

Try going into a pastry shop in France, and ordering a chocolate croissant. You’d laugh if a foreigner came to this country, and ordered a hot dog by ordering a “long, skinny hamburger.” After all, both hot dogs and hamburgers are fast food served in

Dear Editor,

The members of the Clear Creek Baptist Church would like to thank everyone who came to the benefit dinner and singing we held April 28. The money collected is for a fellowship building at our church. We especially want to thank the singers who came – The Dendy Family; Oliver Rice and band; Gene Turpin and the ones who came with him. We also want to give a heartfelt “thank you” to Joe and Judy Geoghagan who stepped in at the last moment and cooked the BBQ pork. Roger Lee Wilson had planned to cook for us but due to a very serious illness of his nephew Jason Woods, had to be away. Please continue to pray for our church and pray for Jason’s recovery.

Another View

Turning my liberal eyes blue

I think of myself as fairly open-minded in most areas. I’ve accepted disruptions to American industry and American families to create a safer, more just, and prosperous world. I wasn’t surprised to find our American Airlines flight from Lima, Peru to Miami, Cuba, excuse me, Miami, FL, was aboard a European made Airbus A-300. The snack bag was labeled Papitas al Hilo, Producto, Peruano. It contained little fried potato sticks that were pretty tasty. A bag of Orville Redenbacher popcorn would have been more welcoming, but I guess that with sky-high fuel prices, outrageous labor costs, and widespread bankruptcies in the airline industry, the company executives have decided against putting microwaves in the seat backs. I’d rather keep my six inches of leg room than compete with an oven, and the flight attendants would probably forbid its use during flight anyway.

I didn’t complain that the pursar, or is it bursar, spoke with a heavy South American accent. At least, he was trying. I still think of American Airlines as United States of America Airlines or North America Airlines. Pan-American Airlines had its shot and blew it years ago. Still, I was taking it all in stride, liberal independent and devotee of globalization that I am.

Then the flight attendants walked down the aisles passing out U.S. custom declarations, which is standard on flights returning home. What surprised me was that the customs declarations were in Spanish. There were no forms in English aboard. I am not possibly un-bilingual, and even if I were fluent in Spanish, I would have, as a matter of pride, asked for a form in English. The flight attendant told me there were no English forms available, but offered assistance if I was too dumb to figure it out. Lizzie made A’s in college Spanish and “Nombre” and “Passaporte Numero” aren’t all that hard to translate. Nonetheless, I found the situation more than a little annoying.

For years I have been supporting immigration, both legal and illegal. If I’ve needed a little work done around the house, I’ve hired without ever demanding a social security card or English fluency. That is only one very small reason that I’ll never run for Congress. The main reason is that most of you hate me. For years, I’ve been telling friends who endorse any of the plans to establish English as the official language of the USA that they are narrow-minded, that such establishment would be only symbolic, and an unhealthy symbol at that.

I’ve joyfully wallowed around in the great melting pot that is America celebrating each contribution made by immigrants. My ancestors offered pizza, but I’m equally at home with spring rolls and quesadillas. Immigrants built the railroads and provided the sweat that made American steel. Funny little guys with strange names and odd outfits built America. The first ones looked strange to native Americans. Later arrivals looked odd to the guys who looked strange to the natives. That’s how our country was built. There has always been a new group, eager to do the breaking, dirty work that no one else wants to do, or do it for wages that more established Americans were unwilling to accept. More recent immigrants have run our giant farms, slaughtered our cattle, trimmed our hedges, changed our babies’ diapers, and established a distribution system for illicit drugs that makes Fed Ex green with envy.

I never intended, expected, nor supported establishing English as the official language of the United States of America. I knew that the newcomers would learn to speak English when they tired of putting down shingles in 90-degree heat. The new wave of Mexican immigrants differ from those of the past in that they often continue to think of themselves as Mexican, leave their families at home, and send U.S. dollars south. In that way, they are more like the Spanish conquistadors of the 16th century than the English settlers of the 17th. American dollars and cluster bombs are about the only things we export anymore. The dollars are a welcome and major import to Mexico.

While I was busy defending the rights of immigrants to preserve their cultures and speak their native languages, I expected that we would at least continue to offer English as an alternative on U.S. government publications. Unless I’m sadly mistaken, the customs declaration is an instrument of the United States government. I’m certain that they still print them in English, if for no other reason than that some flights originate in London. I wish they would load a few of the English version on my next flight back home, before I’m forced to learn a second language or re-think some of my most basic beliefs. Of course, if I did re-evaluate my position, you might like me better.
The weekend of May 25-26, The Girls’ Clubhouse returned to the place of its inaugural end-of-year service trip 10 years ago – Charleston, S.C.

The club’s first Charleston service project that May of 1998 was working with “Meals on Wheels” and members were graduates of Highlands School Class of 2004. This year it worked with the Charleston County Parks & Recreation Department on its Folly Beach reclamation project with its crew from Highlands School grades 6-8.

Over the last few years, Folly Beach on James Island outside of Charleston has eroded away due to frequent storms. Sand has been dredged from the bottom of Charleston Harbor and transported to Folly Beach to rebuild the beach.

Transported with the sand are reef rocks – rough, fossilized stones the size of a quarter on up. Some of the rocks are lying on the surface; others are just beneath the sand.

In response to complaints from beach-goers, who have stubbed their toes or cut their feet on the rocks, volunteers like The Girls’ Clubhouse, and the parks department are slowly and deliberately removing them.

On Saturday, May 26, the group of 10 Girls’ Clubhouse members gathered on the beach under balmy skies. The project began with an explanation from Karen Nugent, volunteer coordinator with Charleston Parks & Recreation, who explained the reason for the project. In addition to the inconvenience of having the rocks on the beach, she said the parks department wants the rocks removed because they aren’t natural to the beach. “If they were meant to be here, we would leave them,” she said. “But since they were transported here, we are removing them.”

The girls worked with Karen, picking up the rocks which were all embedded with some kind of sea life fossil. The rocks were put in the blue plastic bins whose contents were emptied into a golf cart bed and dumped on the shores of the Folly River as it empties into the ocean. The rocks, though unwanted on the beach itself, serve as erosion control devices along the river linking the ocean to the Intracoastal waterway running along the back of the Folly Beach Park.

In between resting at the cottage at James Island Park, shopping in the market in Charleston, enjoying a ghost walk tour, eating dinner at Tommy Condon’s on Church Street, and spending most of Sunday at Splash Island, the girls rode bikes all over the park, every spare moment day or night.

All in all it was a great end-of-year service trip and culminated the club’s 10th year of year-long service to the Highlands community.

The club is made up of middle school girls grades 6-8 welcoming rising sixth-graders each fall.

A very special thanks goes to The Old Edwards Hospitality Group which contributed $500; Ralph Stevens of Jolie’s who contributed $100; Highlands Own Internet Store which contributed $100; Hillrie Quin who contributed $100, and Tony and Terri Potts who contributed $40. Thank you for supporting The Girls’ Clubhouse in this way. You made the trip possible.

It's been a slow news week...

Lately, I’ve been totally uninspired, which is panic time for one who writes a weekly column. If all else fails, some celebrity will do something stupid that gives me somebody to squawk about; however the best that surfaced this week was Lindsay Lohan’s bad girl activities. Since I have no idea who she is or what she did to achieve her celebrity, I feel inadequate to comment on her recent fall from grace.

Just as I was about to call in sick, who should emerge from the slime but our old buddy, Sandy Berger. Now I wouldn’t have called Berger a celebrity in his position as National Security Advisor under Bill Clinton. That position deserves more respect than celebrity, perhaps dignitary? But as a result of his unimaginable pilferage of sensitive documents from the National Archives and the scandal that ensued, I believe he has earned celebrity status.

The National Security Advisor serves as the chief advisor to the President on national security issues. The job puts its holder in the most trusted and sensitive position, and to a large extent, holds the safety of all of us in his hands. This requires the most solid and serious of individuals, a person of unimpeachable character. For four years, that person was Sandy Berger.

When Bush was elected, Berger was replaced by Condoleezza Rice, and one would have assumed that we had heard the last of him. Not so fast. To give a little background, in a lesser position during Clinton’s first term, in 1994 Berger was ordered to divest himself of an investment in Amoco, which the administration considered a conflict of interest. It was discovered later that he had not sold the stock, claiming he “forgot.” He was fined $23,000 as a civil penalty.

In April, 1996, Berger briefed the Department of Energy (why them I have no idea) that China had acquired the designs of several U. S. nuclear warheads. He failed to inform the President until July, 1997. In 1999, the story came out and a furor followed, culminating in Lamar Alexander’s demand that Berger resign. In his own defense, Berger said that a lot of information came across his desk and he didn’t think it was important enough to inform the President for more than a year. He did not resign and he was not fired.

And now for the culmination (I hope) of his illustrious career. In 2003, while acting as informal foreign policy advisor to John Kerry’s campaign, Berger was called to testify before the 9/11 Commission. They wanted to know what he passed along to his successor, Condoleezza Rice, as to steps taken during his tenure against terrorism.

As you know, prior to his testimony, Berger visited the National Archives and while in a reading room, removed several top-secret documents by putting them in his attaché case, his jacket, his pants and his socks. When initially probed by reporters, he claimed this was accidental. What else would you expect from a “friend of Bill’s”?

He later came clean (?) by admitting that he actually, with malice aforethought, purposely secreted the documents out of the building, slicing some up and burying others.

Quoting from Wikipedia, “Critics suggest Berger destroyed primary evidence revealing anti-terrorism policies and actions that his motive was to permanently erase Clinton pre-9/11 mistakes.” Then House Speaker Dennis Hastert said “What information could be so embarrassing that a man with decades of experience in handling classified documents would risk being caught pilfering our nation’s most sensitive secrets?” My sentiments exactly.

On April 1, 2005, (I hope the date isn’t lost on you) Berger pled guilty to a misdemeanor. U. S. attorneys levied a $10,000 fine and a loss of his security clearance for three years. Wow. The fine was later upped to $50 G’s. As part of his plea agreement, he was to take a polygraph test at the behest of the Justice Department. Hasn’t happened yet and I doubt it ever will. Why not, I haven’t a clue?

Berger currently said he’d turn in his law license to avoid further examination of this touchy subject. Now, if you or I perpetrated this nefarious deed, we would never again see the light of day. Had Scooter Libby done it, he’d probably have been drawn and quartered. Justice may or may not be blind, but sometimes it sure is hard to understand.

Nix agreed. “The ordinance is priority number one. That affects everything else,” he said.

As to priority projects, Nix cited Fifth, Laurel and Pine streets – projects in the Mill Creek Basin — as needing immediate attention. “These areas haunt us as far as storm hydraulic issues go,” he said.

He also said Plan C for Pine Street Park; the use of greenwashes as a means of controlling and cleaning stormwater; and the building of parking decks are all inter-related with aspects of each cited by experts as a means to a viable stormwater control plan. This also means such projects could be funded with Clean Water Management Trust Funds.

Post C for Pine Street Park involved closing Pine Street to establish a block-long park and rerouting the stream above ground in a meandering fashion through the park. It currently runs through Village Square and under Pine and Fourth streets until it empties into Mill Creek by Meadow Mountain Residential.

Nix said the park design with the open stream would be the answer to the flooding problem because it would provide a much wider, meandering channel. “Open channel hydraulics are much better than closed-pipe hydraulics” he said. “It would help matters, plus it’s cheaper than putting the stream through a 48-inch pipe under the street and park.”

Currently the stream turns at 90-degree angles, which causes stopping-up and flooding problems. Since the potential loss of parking on Pine Street has some people up in arms, Plan C-A has been devised where the park’s border would be at Pine Street Alley instead of Fourth Street, which would leave about eight parking spaces intact from CK Swan to Fourth Street.

Plan alternatives will be discussed at 5:30 p.m. during the June 7 Pine Street Park Forum at the Highlands Community Building.

Nix said Pine Street Park plans C and C-A play right into McGill’s suggestions for stormwater control. He also said McGill owns. “They suggest strategically building parking decks rather than devoting additional land to impervious surfaces for parking — a major contributor to rapid stormwater runoff.”

“They suggest strategically building parking decks where central runoff can be managed rather than adding more impervious areas,” he said.

Commissioner Ross said one idea discussed by the architects designing the new Town Hall complex is building a parking deck where the ABC store is, which could also serve as a garage for police cars, parking for the Playhouse and possibly public restrooms. It is also land the town already owns.

At its June 6 Town Board meeting, commissioners were agreeable to the idea of outsourcing the writing of the stormwater ordinance and to budgeting for stormwater projects as is being done for the Town Hall complex and Greenway.

Two CLE classes with openings

Tuesday June 12: “A Highlands Garden Through the Seasons” with Jodie Benson Zahn from 10 a.m. to noon at the Performing Art Center on Chestnut Street. This slide show and discussion of our native flora is limited and there is a small charge of $30 for non-members.

The following Friday June 15 will feature Philip Morsberger: “Passion for Painting.” Also at the PAC from 10-12, Morsberger will display three canvases he is currently working on giving insight into his process. Much of his work is covered in a new book by Christopher Lloyd, surveyor of the “Queen’s Painting Collection,” discussing Philip’s work.

If you would like to take part in either of these classes please phone Mary Myers at the Peggy Crosby Center 526-8811 between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. Monday through Friday.
The power of love

In any Language at the Macon County Talent Show. In my adolescence, I used to listen to Sandy Patti sing it on cassette tape. It is a powerful song because it reminds me that LOVE “pulls us all together, never apart and once we learn to speak it, all the world will hear love in any language, fluently spoken here.”

That has been my experience in the five years we have spent in Highlands. Love pulls this community together in a way that unifies and celebrates. It is my Christian belief that the love of God through Jesus Christ lives in our hearts, our minds and our lives and in our churches, school, businesses, parks, and all of creation in a way that creates unity across our diversity. The love that persons have for one another, for this community, for God’s creation, is what has inspired me and made me too, love Highlands. It is that love that I will miss as we leave to move and serve in Charlotte in a couple of weeks.

Having the opportunity to serve at the Highlands School in the classroom or with the PTO, serving on the Highlands Community Child Development Center Board, the Highlands Effective Living Program (HELP) Committee, and the Peggy Crosby Center Board. Co-pastoring Highlands United Methodist Church, living in Cherokee Drive, I have loved being a part of the Highlands Community. Getting to know diverse and interesting people. Making life-time friendships. I will miss greeting you at the post office, the grocery store, or the red light. I will miss the beauty and coolness of the mountains. I will miss the shared nature of our diversity. The love that persons have for one another, for our community, for God’s creation, is what has inspired me and made me too, love Highlands. It is that love that I will miss as we leave to move and serve in Charlotte in a couple of weeks.

In this final column, I encourage you to continue the love that enriches the community and brings everyone together. In the wedding over which I presided on Saturday and again at the baccalaureate service for the Highlands School Class of 2007 on Sunday, the words from 1 Corinthians, chapter thirteen, were read. These words were not written for a romantic setting nor were they intended as advice to a couple getting married. These words were written for the body of Christ, to learn how to live together, to show how to treat one another: Love is patient; love is kind; love is not envious or boastful or arrogant or rude. It does not insist on its own way; it is not irritable or resentful; it does not rejoice in wrongdoing, but rejoices in the truth. It bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. Love never ends. (v. 4-8a)

These words, written to the church at Corinth, and applicable for us today, teach us how to be a community. They teach us a selfless, giving kind of love. A love that does not put our own wants and needs first. It is a love that calls us to be inclusive, welcoming, and outgoing. I encourage you to keep this kind of love first in all of your decisions, your words, your actions, and your relationships.

I will miss you! Thank you for including us in your community and your lives. I pray God’s blessings and peace in the many days ahead.
Public airs views about county 2007-2008 budget at public hearing

Following a four hour work session on Sunday, June 3 where the Macon County Commission hashed over budget appropriations for schools, teacher supplements, the fire tax and the sheriff department, commissioners heard what the public had to say at a hearing Monday night.

Those who usually attend the monthly commission meetings filed into courtroom A at the courthouse and said their peace about undesignated fund balances in the county and school budgets, as well as the school budget as a whole, the reality of revenue neutral budgets, ad valorum and fire district taxes, and the proposed one percent land transfer tax.

"It’s very interesting that the very same people holding up the 25-cent signs at previous meetings are here complaining about taxes after we established the rate at 24.5 cents, saying we’re spending too much money," said Macon County Commissioner Jim Davis.

He said the commission has been working very hard on the budget and doesn’t spend the public treasury irresponsibly. The first at the podium was Superintendent Dan Brigrman who said he was there to clarify the requested operational budget for the schools.

He said since the school system hasn’t been 100% budgeted since 2003-2004, projects have had to be carried over to subsequent years. “For three years, the capital outlay budget has been a status quo budget. Without full funding, something had to be carried over and we have had to use money to cover that period.”

Brigrman said the school system is requesting 3.76% increase to compensate for last year’s loss and even with that the annual increase is only 5.99%.

Another issue was the request for an increase to teacher supplements. It’s a secret that Macon County falls behind other counties in the state in that category.

“Supplements help us maintain a high-quality staff and gives us a little bit of a competitive edge,” said Brigrman.

Teaer Darlene McDowell gave an impassioned talk about the life and responsibilities of teachers. “If you don’t put money into education, you will end up paying more in welfare and social services later,” she said. “We should be recognized as the professionals we are and we should be paid for the work we do.”

Bob Leavry questioned the school system’s budget saying it should be cut and that the undesignated fund balance should be used. He said Macon County Schools’ graduation rate of just 62% is not something the county should be proud of. He also suggested paying bonuses to attract math and science teachers and to consider merit pay for teachers instead of a standard pay increase.

Commission Chairman Charlie Leatherman, who is a math teacher at Macon Middle School, said it’s true that America’s education system is in crisis. “Somewhere between Head Start and No Child Left Behind something has gone very, very wrong but it’s not a Macon County problem, it’s a national problem.” He said he believes Macon County has one of the finest school systems in the state if not the country.

Commissioner Ronnie Beale said they are trying to do the right thing by the schools and that teachers have become psychologists, social workers, and nurses. “Combine all those salaries and you’re just getting close to what a teacher should be making,” he said.

Commissioner Simpson said schools and the county’s children are the number one priority. “The county has always taken care of the schools and we won’t let our children down,” he said.

John Cleaveland from Highlands said the commissioners set a good tax rate on one hand but then took it back with the land transfer tax.

“The real estate market isn’t as active as it used to be. Adding another tax makes no sense. You say it’s to fund infrastructure, but the people paying this transfer tax don’t get much for their tax dollar from Macon County. Their kids don’t go to school here. About the only thing they get is use of the land fill and most of them have to cart their garbage there themselves.”

He beseeched the commission to rethink the transfer tax. “Real Estate can’t carry everything in this county. We don’t want people to start thinking about going somewhere else.”

Chairman Leatherman said the transfer tax isn’t a done deal. “All we did was sign a resolution in support of it, asking that all 100 counties be allowed to have the same tax the six counties down east have. The people still have the power and they will decide with a referendum,” he said.

However he said the one percent transfer tax would reduce the county’s property taxes by 6-8 cents yearly. “That will result in a reduction in property taxes for citizens who don’t do anything except just live here,” he said.

Cleaveland also said Macon County is in the greatest prosperity it has ever known so it just doesn’t make sense to talk about a $70 million bond. “The good times aren’t going to last forever and when it turns it will be a long slide down,” he said. “You need to fund our needs, not our wants. Think about what this is going to cost us.”

Commissioners will vote on 2007-2008 budget at the June 18 commission meeting at 6 p.m.

Duke Energy Carolinas seeks first base rate increase since 1991

- Town of Highlands wholesale rates not affected at this time -

Duke Energy Carolinas last Friday asked for permission to increase revenues from all its North Carolina customers. In the proposal, Nantahala Area residential customers will see an average increase of 6.2 percent, or about $5.40 on a typical monthly bill (using 1,000 kWh).

The Nantahala Area has approximately 70,000 customers in the far western NC counties of Cherokee, Clay, Graham, Jackson, Macon, and Swain that are served by Duke Energy.

The requested rate increase, filed with the North Carolina Utilities Commission varies by customer class.

Upon approval, residential customers would move to the new rates effective January 1, 2008. Existing general service and industrial customers will be transitioned to Duke Energy Carolinas’ rates schedules over time. Duke Energy has proposed average rate increases for general service and industrial customers in the remainder of their North Carolina service area of 2 percent or less. Duke expects an answer “sometime very late this year.”

Town Administrator Richard Betz said Highlands’ town attorneys in Washington, who handle its power issues, confirmed that the increased discussed in this announcement will not affect Highlands’ wholesale power rates. “Nor is there a rate increase proposed for the 2007-2008 budget,” he said.

Ellen Ruff, president of Duke Energy Carolinas said the proposed rate increase will help ensure Duke Energy Carolinas’ ability to provide safe, reliable and economically efficient electric service to its customers while adding to and modernizing the electric infrastructure we need to support North Carolina’s continued growth.

Such modernization will require significant capital expenditures over the next several years. Duke Energy Carolinas believes the rate increase is essential for the company to maintain a strong financial profile and attract the capital necessary for these large-scale projects.

Customers have seen increases in their bills over the years as they use more electricity and as annual adjustments are made for fuel costs. However, this is the first proposed change in Duke base rates in 16 years.

Costs other than fuel are recovered through base rates. Since 1990, the company has invested more than $9 billion in power plants and equipment to serve customers in the Carolinas without asking for an increase in those rates.

The company has held the line on electric prices primarily by reducing operating and maintenance expenses, increasing system efficiency and adding revenue from new customers. However, today’s utility services continue to rise and exceed growth in customer revenue.

“The price of just about everything has gone up, Duke Energy Carolinas’ base rates have not changed since 1991, and are more than 27 percent below the national average,” said Ruff. “Even with the requested increase, our prices will still be very competitive and lower than they were 16 years ago, when adjusted for inflation,” she said.

In the rate review, Duke Energy Carolinas will also address the manner in which the cost of service is assigned to various customer classes. Currently, some customer groups bear a greater share of that cost than is appropriate. The proposed new rates attempt to address that by allocating a larger portion of this proposed increase to certain customer classes.

Duke Energy Corp., one of the largest electric power companies in the United States, supplies and delivers energy to approximately 3.9 million U.S. customers. The company has nearly 37,000 megawatts of electric generating capacity in the Midwest and the Carolinas, and natural gas distribution services in Ohio and Kentucky. In addition, Duke Energy has more than 4,000 megawatts of electric generating capacity in Latin America, and is a joint-venture partner in a U.S. real estate company.

Duke Energy’s Carolinas operations include nuclear, coal-fired, natural gas and hydroelectric generation. That diverse fuel mix provides nearly 21,000 megawatts of safe, reliable and competitively priced electricity to more than 2.3 million electric customers in a 24,000-square-mile service area in North and South Carolina.

Bill would expand ‘sex ed’ topics

By Susanna Hearn
Reporter

Recent presentations by Franklin High School students regarding sexual education at local schools have highlighted problems with the current Abstinence-Until-Marriage (AUM) curriculum and the rate of teen pregnancies in Macon County.

“I am aware of 16 pregnant students at Franklin High School this year,” said Dan Brigman, Macon County School Superintendent. “This number is slightly up from the 13 in our area last year. Sexual activity definitely occurs among members of our community, including our school-aged population.’’

New House Bill 879 would make sexual education in North Carolina comprehensive. Sexual Education would still be abstinence-based while educating students preventing sexually transmitted diseases and pregnancy if they choose to be sexually active.

According to statistics from the Adolescent Pregnancy Prevention website, 63 percent of NC teens have had sex by the time they reach their senior year of high school, and NC ranks ninth in the nation for the highest teen pregnancy rate.

“We cover a wide array of topics throughout the grade levels regarding our current Abstinence-based Sex Education program, including risks involved with sexual activity,” said Brigman.

The current program evaluates how a mutually faithful monogamous heterosexual relationship in the context of marriage is the best lifelong means of avoiding sexually transmitted diseases including HIV/AIDS while also comparing and contrasting methods of contraception, their effectiveness and failure rates, and the risks associated with different methods of contraception as a means of preventing STDs.

Still proponents of HB 879 believe that the Abstinence-Until-Marriage program fails to accurately address all the issues pertaining to sexual education. According to Adolescent Pregnancy Prevention the success of AUM programs is based on opinions and not actual sexual behavior, and is not actually responsible for the drop in teen pregnancy rates which have been falling since 1990.

“Educating our youth about the risks and potential outcomes of risky behavior should be a collaborative effort and involve the home (parents/guardians) as well as the local churches,” said Brigman.

HB 879 would allow parents to opt their children out of sexuality education if they prefer, and it would not jeopardize Federal Abstinence funding. North Carolina receives $1.4 million annually in Title V abstinence education funds, and under HB 879 NC could continue to receive these funds.

The following awards are nominated and voted on by the Highlands School Faculty and Staff:

• The Highlander Service Award is awarded to the community individual, club or organization that has consistently been supportive of Highlands School throughout the years: Kim Ingram

• The Highlander Pride Award goes to a senior who has gone far beyond what was “expected” and completed what was “asked” and “even more.” This award recognizes examples of Highlands’ School Best. Part of the award reads as follows: “For those who give of themselves with Highlander Pride for the betterment of Highlands School: Craig McCall.”
Barbara Brown Taylor, author of “Leaving Church: A Memoir of Faith” will meet customers and sign copies of her book at Cyrano’s Bookshop on Saturday, June 9, from 1-3 p.m.; while James T. Costa — whose signing was postponed from last week — will sign copies of “The Other Insect Societies” from 3:30-5 p.m. Dr. Costa is the executive director of the Highlands Biological Station. His fascinating and beautifully illustrated book examines the social behavior of those insects beyond the bees, ants and wasps which usually get all the attention.

The Rev. Brown was the rector of Grace-Calvary Episcopal Church in Clarkesville, Ga., and is now the Butman Professor of Religion at Piedmont College. Reviews and interviews in the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, the New York Times, National Public Radio’s “Fresh Air” and other media have helped make “Leaving Church” a publishing phenomenon. In the Dallas Morning News critic Lauren Miller wrote, “I loved this book. Her beautiful, absorbing memoir will bless countless readers, helping us see God in the church, and out in the world, and in small interstices in between. “Leaving Church” chronicles Taylor’s life-long spiritual quest and eventual crisis: After five years leading a parish — the one thing she most wanted to do in this world — Taylor realized she was depressed, that her role as priest was all consuming, suffocating her own relationship with God: “To be a priest is to suspect that there is always something more urgent that you should be doing, no matter what you are doing, and to make peace with the fact that the work will never get done.” In Clarkesville she led a very, very small civil-rights march past angry Ku Klux Klan members and also learned how to post bond for wayward church members, lead an intervention, hide a woman from her violent husband, visit death row and “close the eyes on a dead body.” But she also shared in the joys of weddings and baptisms and the more secular rituals of small-town life. In the end, Barbara Brown Taylor left her church, not the priesthood — and she kept her faith in God. “Committing myself to the task of becoming fully human is saving my life now . . . there is more than one way to do this . . . [but] because I am a Christian, I do it by imitating Christ.”

other hand, there is no success without physician leadership," he added.
Kaufman said a quick comparison of the charges for treating several key diagnoses at this and several surrounding hospitals showed that rates here may be well below average. “You are a real bargain. I hope your patients know that.”
Over the course of the next several months the board will take a more in-depth look at operational trends, the hospital’s charge structure, its current mission statement, and other key factors, as it begins to draft a new strategic plan.

a bun! You don’t like the “pain” in pain au chocolat? It just means “bread.” Hey, we live in the country of Death by Chocolate! And we’re squeamish about pain?

What’s with calling a filet mignon, a “petite steak?” Steak is masculine, not feminine. It’s “un steak,” not “une steak,” so if you must insist on the French version, it’s “un petit steak.”

Better still, why don’t just call it a small steak?

Someone asked me how to say “doggie bag” in French. We don’t have them. In France, the emphasis is on quality, not quantity. When I first moved to New York, I ordered a deli sandwich which was so huge, I took it home. I got five meals out of it, including the first one in the deli.

French meals are based on having several small courses, not one huge heaping plate full of food. And if you don’t finish your food, you just leave it in your plate; you don’t haul it home.

It’s nice to sit around with John these days, sharing meals. It sure makes a pleasant change from those lonely weekends in New York. Do you know what a ménage à trois is for a single woman in New York? Her and Ben & Jerry.

Many scientists don’t seem to realize that sometimes when you can’t measure something, it’s not that it doesn’t exist or that it is really, really small; sometimes it means that you are asking the wrong questions or using the wrong equipment.

Think of some of the strange things scientists have been talking about in recent years: Subatomic particles blinking in and out of existence — like your finger dipping in and out of the water. Particles splitting and maintaining a link as they travel to opposite corners of the universe — your fingers moving apart into a V.

Maybe we’re only seeing a tiny part of the whole picture.

Maybe the world of the spirit isn’t some place foreign to the physical world; maybe it’s here and now surrounding us if we just had the eyes to see.

Excercise saved me!

Dear Editor,

I would like to say I woke up and saw the light. But until a 14-year-old dog and a hike up Sunset Rock for the environment, I was clueless. I just was not listening even though the call was awfully loud. I can be rather deaf at times.

What happened? That 14-year-old dog passed me up on the road to Sunset Rock. That dad gum dog told me it was time I did more exercise than sitting at my beloved computer. I do thank Don Mullen for his kindness in saying it was probably because I’d just come back from the bottom lands. Highlands has a thoughtful mayor and probably a doctor with instincts that this gal might fall right over!

I used to be quite active in my much younger years. I’m heading for the Big 6-0 at the end of the year. Somewhere along the way, I became allergic to sweat. That’s right. Those big drops that cascade down the back of my neck just thinking about exercise. Any more and I’m headed to the shower...to rest.

I’d like to give my thanks to Highlands-Cashiers Hospital and Health Tracks. I’ve seen the articles in the paper in the past but I was sure they weren’t for me. It took a dog and a walk to convince me otherwise. So how am I getting past the sweat part? I’m taking their twice-a-week class for those with osteoporosis, either here or coming down the pike. It’s a weight-bearing class and we go at our own speed. We just choose lesser weights at first. Don’t get me wrong, I’m not a gung ho exerciser yet. The best words I like are “Rest” (Susanna and her sunny attitude) and “Good Job” (Erin). These gals have lots of patience!

MC Healthy Carolinians review health assessment

Developing a volunteer medical clinic, addressing obesity and supporting families are among the priorities identified in a new comprehensive health care assessment completed by Healthy Carolinians of Macon County (HCMC) and reviewed at the group’s annual meeting May 22 at Macon Bank Corporate Offices.

HCMC is a public-private partnership focused on improving health and safety for Macon County residents. President Barbara McRae convened the annual meeting and told the group of more than 60 of the important opportunities that have been identified by the health care assessment process.

“An assessment is like many snapshots of the community taken over a long period of time,” said Bill Stiles of Stiles Healthcare Strategy, Inc., who presented at the meeting. Stiles served as a consultant to HCMC and facilitated development of the assessment over a 10-month period. The assessment involved community interviews, focus groups, a survey of 460 households and review of secondary research from state, regional and national sources.

Among the findings of the assessment are:

- Lack of insurance is major barrier to health care. Those without insurance are less likely to see a doctor, be screened for common diseases and treated for chronic ailments like diabetes and hypertension.
- Among those participating in the survey, 9% delayed getting medical care and 10% delayed getting a prescription because they could not afford it.
- That obesity is a major problem in the county, especially among young adults. The HCMC study found that 39% of those 25 years old to 34 are obese.
- Access to mental health services is difficult. About 17% of Macon families have had difficulty accessing help for mental health or substance abuse problems. A lack of local treatment options is the main reason for the access problem.
- Parents and youth have very different perspectives on youth behavior and experiences. For example, 16% of parents report their child has been bullied by another child, but 39% percent of middle school students say they have been bullied. Only 11% of parents worry about their children using alcohol, but as many as 46% of middle school students report experience drinking.
- While some findings define problems, others describe the quality of life in Macon County. For example:
  - 90% of residents rate quality of life here as good to excellent.
  - 93% of workers say they are happy in their jobs.
  - 95% of elderly — those over age 75 — feel they have adequate transportation to get where they want to go.
  - Children have wide access to medical care. 96% of children have seen a doctor or health care professional in the past year.
- The full assessment report will be made available to the public in early July.

“As with our past research and reports, we will place the new comprehensive health care assessment on the county web site and make its findings available to any interested,” Stiles said.

Communities should get behind hospital, consultant says

Highlands-Cashiers Hospital may be the most unusual, most challenging hospital in the country to manage, a nationally known consultant told hospital board members this past Thursday.

Nathan S. Kaufman, of Kaufman Strategic Advisors, LLC, of San Diego, CA, said he has worked with hospitals and healthcare companies across the country, both small community owned facilities and huge corporate behemoths. “Yours is one of the most difficult, if not the most difficult, hospital to understand and manage that I’ve ever come across,” he said during a day-long planning retreat held Thursday at The Mountain Conference Center in Highlands.

Kaufman, who has 25 years experience in healthcare management, was hired by the board earlier this year to help the hospital develop a strategic plan. He is an acknowledged expert in the fields of peak performance of hospitals and physician groups, hospital strategy, physician compensation, integrated delivery systems, managed care, joint ventures and dispute resolution. In addition to being a noted lecturer and author, he serves on a number of advisory and editorial boards, and has appeared many times as an expert witness in healthcare arbitration cases.

For the past six weeks he and his staff have been pouring over financial data, demographic figures, and utilization trends to come up with a “bird’s eye” view of the hospital’s situation. At times, Kaufman seemed genuinely astonished that a hospital exists here at all, much less one with such an extensive physician community.

At a time when there is a national physician shortage, when small hospitals are closing all over the country, and when many others are in a downward spiral, Kaufman said, “It’s amazing to me that you’ve been able to recruit and retain the physicians you have. It’s a miracle you have a radiologist up here, for example, when there are many larger hospitals that can’t even find a full-time radiologist.”

This area is fortunate to even have a hospital, given a year-round population of only about 8,000, he added. Kaufman said it usually requires a year-round population of 20,000 to 30,000 to support even a small hospital, and many of those are struggling.

“This is as difficult a situation to manage as any place I’ve ever seen,” he added.

Board member Julian Franklin pointed out that past boards have always understood that having a hospital here required major financial support in the form of donations from the community. Kaufman agreed, saying that a major for-profit corporation such as HCA would certainly never consider starting a hospital under this circumstance. “Having a hospital in an area of only 8,000 year-round residents is a “dog that won’t hunt.”

He said he was dumbfounded to learn the extent of the controversy that has surrounded the hospital over the past two years.

“I don’t usually editorialize, but the level of dissension that has occurred in your market is crazy,” he said. “It’s vitally important that everyone in your communities get behind the hospital if they expect to have a hospital here in the future.”

And he had a dire warning. “If the community doesn’t get behind the hospital, then the job (of keeping the hospital viable) is going to be just too difficult to sustain.”

Outside management companies aren’t the answer, Kaufman said, adding, “They don’t have any magic bullets.” He said the hospital is already doing many of the things a management company would do, such as group purchasing of supplies. And he called the effort the hospital has made to hold down costs, particularly salaries, “heroic.” But after reviewing the hospital’s finances for the last several years, Kaufman said that cost cutting in this particular case is not the answer. “You aren’t going to be able to shrink your way into profitability.”

“This is a hard hospital to figure out. I don’t think that the professional hospital management companies have any experience or quick fixes for a hospital such as Highland-Cashiers.”

Pressures throughout the health care industry are creating friction between hospitals and their physicians all over the country, he said, and the traditional hospital-physician relationship is no longer sustainable. For one thing, more and more physicians are leaving independent private practice and working directly for hospitals. He said it is more important than ever for hospitals and physicians to work together, not only to improve patient care, but to improve efficiency and productivity. Kaufman told the group that little good can happen in health care without both money and physician leadership.

“There are times when it’s necessary to make certain physicians unhappy. You can’t view the success of the hospital just in terms of physician happiness.”

Leadership Highlands Class of 2006-2007 graduates

By K. E. Evans

It was a gorgeous balmy evening when the Leadership Highlands class of 2006-2007, Chamber members, Leadership Highlands board members and alumni met at the Main Street Inn for a final farewell: The Graduation Celebration.

Eleanor Crowe-Young was nominated and has accepted the three-year term as the Leadership Highlands Representative for the class of 2006-2007. Robin Armstrong-Neil was elected Member-at-Large for our class.

Each Leadership Class selects a project that has a positive impact on the community. We decided on two. One project is dedicated to the entity, “Leadership Highlands.” While participating in the Christmas Parade our class felt that it was time for “product identity:” a Leadership Highlands logo. Ronnie Stilton recommended local graphic artist and writer, Lonnie Busch. Lonnie generously offered his vast talent to this complex project. With the help and expertise of class member Lorna Alexander a sophisticated timeless logo was created for our class and more importantly for future leadership class recognition.

Highlands is a destination that is growing rapidly and as we went through the year our class was presented with many opportunities and project possibilities that would make a significant contribution to the community. After much thought and deliberation our class unanimously decided that we could best serve our community by supplying an additional treatment room to the Community Care Clinic. The need is tremendous. The clinic is a non-profit organization that believes everyone in our community deserves basic affordable health care. It is open one evening a week. It is staffed by volunteers and has been operating above capacity since its doors opened. Our project is to fully finish an existing (presently unusable) treatment room so that quality medical services can be provided in a timely fashion to those who are in need.

What we learned this year was invaluable. Eleven, very diverse, talented, successful each in their own right, came together. We learned from a challenging, complex educational program that gave tremendous insight into the heart and soul of our community. But, what we learned from each other might possibly have more intrinsic long-term value. Leadership Highlands became an experience of personal growth that extended beyond our individual comfort zones in a program well worth our commitment, hard work and time.
Savannah ballet company coming to the Playhouse July 8-10

For the first time in its 69 seasons, Highlands Playhouse will host the Contemporary Ballet Theatre of Savannah, June 8-10 when they will unveil “Dare to be Moved,” a dynamic, creative and high-energy production with a wide range of original choreography.

The premiere marks the culmination of two years’ effort by the Playhouse Board to stage ballet in Highlands.

“It’s rare to find a ballet company that works at this time of year,” said Playhouse general manager Henry Johnson. “Most companies go into hibernation in the spring and summer.

The CBT’s artistic director James Atkinson developed “Dare to be Moved” as a blending of contemporary and powerful classical dance. Atkinson’s choreography keeps the bodies in motion, creating movement and utilizing space in manners unusual to the classical stage. The level of technicality and physical demands of the movement are every bit as breathtaking and exhilarating as the classical genre. The production features dancers from around the United States.

The production will include “Le Spectre de la Rose” with music by Carl Maria von Weber. This performance tells the story of a young girl who, returning from her first ball, falls asleep in her chair. “Flummoxed Zeiram,” with music by Michael Brook, is a pure contemporary ballet with a twist to it. “Medea,” is a new production of Euripides’ classic story of love, jealousy, revenge and death, set to music by Samuel Barber.

The Playhouse will host the ball at 8 p.m. on Friday and Saturday, June 8th and 9th, and 2 p.m. Sunday, June 10th. The performance is sponsored by Schmitt-Building Contractors Inc. For information or to reserve tickets, call the box office at (828) 526-2695.

The ballet marks the beginning of an ambitious season for the Playhouse, which will follow with Cole Porter’s “Kiss Me Kate,” performed from June 21 through July 8.

The production is a musical within a musical, just as its source material, Shakespeare’s “The Taming of the Shrew,” is a play within a play. This gives its battle of the sexes plot the opportunity to construct elaborate Chinese box of missed cues, mistaken identities and thrown bric-a-brac.

The Playhouse’s 2007 season continues with Neil Simon’s “Laughter on the Twentieth-Floor,” “My Way: A Frank Sinatra Tribute,” “Talley’s Folly,” and “Forever Plaid.”

Week-long summer theater classes at Highlands Playhouse July 10 and 21

Children’s Theatre Classes will be held at the Highlands Playhouse July 10-14 and July 17-21 with a performance on Saturday July 22, 2007. The classes are for ages 6-15. Hours are 9 a.m.-12 noon for ages 6-10 and 1-4 p.m. for ages 11-15. Cost is $150 for the two week session. It will be a fun filled opportunity for the children to experience improvisation, scene work, characterization, learn some of the behind the scenes of theatre and even create their own special projects. Call the Highlands Playhouse Box Office at 828-526-2695 for registration.

PAC gears up for a busy summer, launches new website

The Martin-Lipscomb Performing Arts Center (PAC) is planning a busy summer of programs sponsored by PAC as well as other not for profit organizations. To help the public keep up to date with all its events, PAC has launched a new website: www.highlandsperformingartscenter.org.

A complete listing of all public events at the Center is available at the site at the Events page. Also available is a way to order tickets to PAC events. PAC is located at 507 Chestnut Street in Highlands.

On Saturday, June 23 at 7:30 p.m. PAC presents its 5th annual Jazz at the PAC jazz concert featuring New York guitarist Pete McCann.

McCann is returning to Highlands by popular demand. Tickets for the concert, which also features outstanding local jazz musicians, are $15. Tickets can be purchased by calling 828-526-9047 or at the door.

The show will feature a stage band, Ray and Collins plus guest performers each week singing many of America’s best loved hits — everything from “Sentimental Journey” and “In the Mood” to “Respect” and “Natural Woman.” The show will feature music made famous by Carole King, Ray Charles, Lou Rawls and Dolly Parton. Ray plans to close the show with a rousing “Gospel Finale.”

OEI announces May Service Champion Awards and Dept. of the Month

Old Edwards Hospitality Group is pleased to announce Service Champions for May 2007 and Department. These recognition programs are utilized to reward and recognize associates who go above and beyond the call of duty to meet and exceed the resort guest’s expectations. Throughout the year, associates are nominated for the Service Champion Program. Each month, associates are recognized at an appreciation gathering. Associates with the most qualifying nominations are nominated for the Service Champion Program. Each month, associates are recognized at an appreciation gathering. Associates with the most qualifying nominations are awarded gold, silver and bronze awards with monetary prize equivalents of $250, $100 and $50 respectively. At the end of the year, three Champions are selected from these recipients and prizes are awarded in the gold ($1000), silver ($500) and bronze ($250) categories.

At the monthly Associate Appreciation gathering the following awards were given:
- May 2007 Service Champions:
  - Lawren Tucker, Madison’s and Banquets, Bronze
  - Tim Hanson, Maintenance, Silver
  - Danny Chastain, Maintenance, Gold

“By setting goals and rewarding the staff members regularly, we encourage positive motivation and set a standard for excellence that is not only attainable, it becomes second nature,” said Mario Gomes, OEI chief executive officer and general manager. “This level of service is what sets us apart as the award-winning property that we have become.”

Additionally, Gomes announced the Maintenance Department as “Department of the Month” for May 2007.

individual or group,” said Kathy McGaha, HCMC Executive Director. “We hope others in the community will use this information to support their own efforts to improve our community.”

In the months ahead leaders of HCMC will be working to organize responses to issues and priorities identified in the assessment.

HCMC volunteers are also available to present the assessment and its findings to interested groups in the county.
Old Edwards Inn and Spa is pleased to announce its bronze-level sponsorship of Highlands' Culinary Weekend 2007. Highlands will become “Cooking Central” during this first annual culinary festival scheduled to take place Thursday, November 8 through Sunday, November 11. This community-wide event will highlight Highlands’ majestic mountain location, boundless activities, appealing accommodations, unique retail shops, and extraordinary cuisine.

In conjunction with the festival, Old Edwards Inn and Spa will host two very special events:

1. Patz & Hall Wine Dinner at The Farm at Old Edwards Inn
   Old Edwards Executive Chef, Bill Heubel will prepare a six-course gourmet dinner to go along with premium selections of Patz & Hall wines. Sourcing from the finest vineyards in the Napa Valley, Russian River Valley, Mendocino County, Sonoma Coast and Santa Lucia Highlands in Monterey County, Patz & Hall is renowned for award-winning Chardonnay and Pinot Noir. Wine Spectator magazine voted Patz & Hall Pinot Noir in the top “30 Hottest Reds” in December 2006. Friday, November 9, 2007 at 6:30 p.m., $50 per person inclusive – or five event vouchers. For reservations and information for this event, please contact the Highlands Visitor Center at 828.526.5847.

   Packages including three nights of deluxe accommodations and the wine dinner for two are available at Old Edwards Inn and Spa priced at $3,119 inclusive of tax and gratuity. For package reservations please call 828.787.2604.

   About the Culinary Festival:
   The event is an opportunity to showcase all that Highlands has to offer visitors, seasonal homeowners, and year-round residents. The inaugural event will commence on Thursday evening with an Opening Reception Celebration. Throughout the weekend, Highlands’ area restaurants, accommodations, and merchants will partner to present instructional culinary courses/classes, tastings, and an assortment of activities.

2. Laurent-Perrier Champagne & Neuhaus Chocolate Pairing Seminar
   This celebratory event pairs two delicious favorites symbolizing luxury and nobility — fine Laurent-Perrier Champagne and Neuhaus Belgian chocolates. Laurent-Perrier is one the world’s most esteemed Champagne houses with a lineage that traces back some 200 years. Neuhaus Belgian Chocolates was established in 1857 and is best known for divine pralines among other confections. This event is being held in conjunction with Highlands’ own Chocolate Bear. Friday, Nov. 9, 2007 at 6 p.m., $169 per person inclusive – or five event vouchers. For reservations and information for this event, please contact the Highlands Visitor Center at 828.526.5847.

devlopment of a commercial park around the airport and to continue to work with existing industry and incubator programs.”

Currently the only two entities receiving room tax proceeds - the three percent tax collected from visitors who stay in bed and breakfasts, inns, hotels, motels, campsites and vacation rental homes - is the Franklin and Highlands Chambers of Commerce.

With the EDC requesting some of it, the county is considering putting the money in a pool and allowing organizations to apply for it on a project-by-project basis. Recently, commissioners have noted the lack of room tax proceeds going to the Nantahala community which is developing rapidly.

“This idea has already been agreed to in theory,” said Greenwood. “Once the budget is adopted, the details will be fleshed out.”

He said the county could disburse the funds in two ways. Commissioners may opt to divert a lump sum of $475,000 from the pool of the room tax money and then allocate the rest to other organizations on a project-by-project basis or opt to require the chambers to apply for allocations from the centralized pool like everyone else.

Greenwood said the commission fully expects the Franklin and Highlands Chambers to balk at the idea but in recent years, municipalities and organizations other than chambers of commerce have been legally utilizing the room tax proceeds as outlined in Senate Bill 948 across Western North Carolina.

The NC State Legislature adopted Senate Bill 948 June 18, 1985 and Macon County passed a resolution October 1986 authorizing the disbursement of a portion of the county occupancy tax collected to the chambers.

Because the rules regarding the disbursement of the funds are broad - “With the understanding that this money is to be used as the law states for the promotion of travel and tourism” - recently, in other areas of the state, the funds have been used to bolster infrastructure, parks, greensways and visitor centers - all under the umbrella of promoting and sustaining tourism.

In its annual “tax fund audit” dated June 30, 2006, the Highlands Area Chamber of Commerce showed receiving $251,577 in room tax money.

During fiscal year 2005-2006, the chamber showed expenses in lump sums - $73,907 spent on general and administrative costs; $103,300 spent on visitor center operations; $11,398 spent on promotions and events; and $53,858 spent for grants and advertising partnerships. Greenwood said in comparison, it appears very little revenue is derived from membership dues. The audit for 2006-2007 hasn’t been presented, yet.

Highlands role in landfill upgrade still unknown

The county needs to know whether the town intends to pay for the municipal garbage transfer station upgrade at the Rich Gap Landfill by the end of July.

MC Solid Waste Director Chris Stahl said the county has drawn up two plans concerning the landfill on Rich Gap Road - both of which satisfy new state regulations concerning the transferring and carting of solid waste.

One addresses a construction and demolition (C&D) transfer station because the C&D component of the landfill will be closed, and the other addresses a co-mingling transfer station for both C&D and municipal solid waste (MSW).

The problem?

The town doesn’t want to foot the $475,000 bill to upgrade the landfill to accommodate its MSW needs. But the county thinks it should foot the bill because the town is using the county landfill to offload its waste which the town then pays the county to cart down the mountain to the main landfill.

At a recent commission meeting, Stahl said in the long run, paying to upgrade the MSW aspect of the landfill will be less expensive for the town. “It is going to have to buy more garbage trucks and hire more people, because they will be carting garbage down the mountain to the main landfill themselves everyday which will cost more in manhours, wear and tear on vehicles, and fuel.”

Town Engineer Lamar Nix said garbage trucks cost upward of $200,000.

During the budget message at the May 30 Town Board meeting, Town Administrator Richard Betz said solid waste rates would not increase this year, because they were increased last year to generate enough revenue for Sanitation Department operations.

“However, the county has said due to changes in new DENR regulations, changes will have to be made to the Highlands C&D landfill which has been used as a transfer station by the town for years,” said Betz. “The county is required to fund a C&D-only transfer station for $688,000 and the commercial waste from the town must either be deposited in a ‘co-mingled transfer station’ at the combined cost of $1,164,000 or hauled by the town to the MC landfill near Franklin.”

By “commercial waste” Betz was referring to both the residential and commercial garbage the town picks up and deposits at the landfill. “Sanitation” is considered one of the town’s enterprises from which it sees revenue.

Betz said he put the $475,000 as an expenditure in the town’s sanitation department budget for 2007-2008, pending the town’s decision on the matter, or pending negotiations between the town and the county.

If the town opts to pay for the co-mingling component to handle its MSW, then it will be funded by an appropriation from general fund investments.

The town wants a “sit-down” with the county to discuss this and other aspects of their relationship. A date has yet to be set.

A sculpture by New York artist John Clement was installed this week at Sculpture on the Green in Cashiers. John is one of the four artists chosen for the first round of permanent installations within The Village Green. In addition to this 12-foot tall sculpture he is lending the park another temporary piece. The Grand Opening Celebration is June 23 from 1-4 with The Smokey Mountain Brass Band, food from Hovan Gourmet, with children's activities, and an opportunity to meet the artists.

A salute to our fallen Special Operations heroes

This year the Highlands SOAR committee has worked diligently to honor these heroes. These “quiet professionals” have given the ultimate sacrifice in the name of freedom. The foundation provides grants (not loans) to the children of fallen heroes for a college education. They also provide support and assistance to special operations personnel severely wounded in the global war against terrorism.

It is important to remind our military that their community supports their efforts, and if they lose their lives fighting for our freedom, they know the Warrior Foundation is here to provide for their children’s education and family counseling.

In 2006, the foundation provided $600,000 to some 109 students enrolled in colleges and universities across the country. We hope the community will continue to support this worthy cause. There are three events this year.

towm contends that it can appoint and the county says it cannot appoint.

"This part touches upon the question of who appoints the representatives," said Coward. "In 50 counties the counties appoint and in the other 50 towns appoint. We are not here tonight to make that decision; that will be handled as per state law."

Allan Bryson, past county commission chairman, who is named in the lawsuit between the county and town concerning ETJ representation, said it's the "black letter law that the counties get to appoint ETJ members to boards. "With 50 percent of them doing it, that means it's up to the counties to make appointments, not the towns. Of course, this is part of the contention between you and I at this time," he said.

The board voted 4 to 1 to amend the Zoning Ordinance with the above verbiage. Commissioner Hank Ross voted against the motion.

The second part of the amendment dealt with the formula to determine the number of ETJ representatives appointed to the Zoning and Planning boards.

"Areas regulated by ETJ shall have proportional representation on the planning and zoning board of adjustment," said Coward. "In compliance with N.C.G.S. 160A-362 which requires the town to provide a means of proportional representation based on population for residents of the ETJ area to be regulated...as follows."

...Based on Macon County's 911 emergencies management data referred to as (X) and average number of residents per dwelling within the ETJ area based upon the latest federal decennial census data (A);

...Based on the number of residential dwellings within the corporate limits of the town determined by the Macon County 911 emergency data (Y) and the latest federal census data (B);

...The percentage shall then be multiplied by the total number of members on each board to determine proportional representation, respectively."

The Highlands Code was amended to formalize the town's practice of allowing all members - those from in town and those from within the ETJ - to vote on all matters regardless of vicinity, as follows.

"Members appointed of any ETJ area shall have equal rights, privileges and duties with other members regarded less of whether the issues before the boards are in town or within the ETJ area."

"That statement makes what's been going on official," said Coward. "If it were not in the code, then the ETJ representatives on the boards couldn't vote on subjects in town."

The board voted 3 to 2 to amend the Town Code to include the verbiage. Commissioner Ross and Commissioner Alan Marsh opposed the motion. Bryson went on record saying that the board's May 16 decision to remove ETJ resident Doug Campbell from the Planning Board and replace him with ETJ member Thomas Craig was not right.

At that meeting, Commissioner Herb James voted against the motion to replace Campbell.

Support for center has been tremendous

Dear Editor,

Sometimes, it's simply astounding to watching the Highlands-Cashiers community come together in support and enthusiasm over a major new effort. And that's exactly what happened on Saturday, May 26, at the groundbreaking party for the Bascom-Louise Gallery's new visual art center.

We were amazed at the number of people that poured onto the grounds of our new facility, cheering us on in our endeavor to build something that will help transform the future of art in this region.

We humbly thank you, the community, for being there and for helping us grow.

We deeply thank Mayor Don Mullen, the Town of Highlands and each member of the Town Board for supporting this project, and particularly for their attendance at this event.

We thank Buck Trott, that quintessential fixture of Highlands, for organizing the participation of a number of dignitaries at the groundbreaking ceremony. So many politicians attended, from Sen. John Snow and Rep. Phil Haire to local commissioners. It made a special day even more special.

We thank the local media for strong coverage of this important event.

And most importantly, we thank Pat Buchanan, event dynamo, for organizing the best community party we've seen.

We have a lot of work to do before our facility opens in summer 2008. Rest assured, however, that by the end of next season, the region will have a brand new, ecologically sensitive, historically based visual art center that will further establish these mountains as a Mecca for the arts. Thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

The Board of The Fine Art Center/Bascom-Louise Gallery

Mountain Garden Club says ‘thanks’

Dear Editor,

We would like to thank the community for its support of the 2007 Mountain Garden Club’s plant sale. We were blessed with beautiful weather, eager customers and many wonderful plants contributed by generous residents. A special thank you to the town for the use of the ball field and the The Chambers Agency for letting us house the plants before the sale. Also thanks to Dick Wertier, Highlands Lawn & Garden, and Buddy Dean for their help and faithfulness though the years. We'd also like to thank the local media for coverage of the event.

We hope to see all of you again next Memorial Day weekend. Thank you.

Jacki Hills and Carol Strunk, co-chairs Mountain Garden Club
