R1 home occupation ordinance drafted

It took some doing, but the Planning Board finally designed an ordinance allowing home occupations in the R1 zoning districts in town and in the ETJ. Home occupations became an issue when residential areas in the ETJ area were zoned R1 which technically doesn’t allow home occupations. Currently, home-based businesses are allowed in R2, R3, B2, B4 and R4. Commissioners agreed to zone several ETJ areas R1 with the understanding that a home occupation ordinance would be drafted and applied to those areas. Two paragraphs one in Section 405.2(A)(2) and one in Section 1002 in the current zoning ordinance would be replaced with nine paragraphs explaining the scope of home occupations. • See ORDINANCE page 15

Board starts work on ETJ in HC & CC

With the northern and southern parts of Extra Territorial Jurisdiction zoned, the planning board is starting to tackle the ETJ areas of Clear Creek and Horse Cove. At the March 26 Planning Board meeting, Chairman Griffin Bell said when the town extended ETJ, it was with the understanding that some kind of zoning would be applied to those areas, but it would take some time to be finalized.

At the combined Town Board/Planning Board meeting on March 14, Planning Board member Mike Bryson wondered if the current zoning ordinance should be applied to Horse Cove and Clear Creek.

“I don’t think we have suitable ordinances for those areas,” said Mike Bryson. “The purpose of ETJ was to protect the corridors and the watershed and neither of those is issues down there. It’s a different category of zoning all together.”

Interim Zoning Administrator Richard Betz made it clear it wasn’t a question of whether Clear Creek and Horse Cove were part of the ETJ. “The town extended ETJ November 2005 so it’s already...” See ETJ page 15

School board tweaks budget

By Susanna Hearn

Amendments to the 2007-2008 school budget were one topic discussed at the Macon County School Board meeting held in Highlands, Monday, March, 26.

“We passed resolutions to make amendments in the state, federal, local current expense budgets,” said Superintendent Dan Briggs. “These are normal activities and did not involve any unique situations.”

New, was detailed documentation which itemized code numbers and descriptions, increases and decreases of each budget’s expenditure and reimbursement.

“The general public doesn’t understand our budget,” said board member Roberta Swank. “They think the school board makes these decisions like they’re rubber stamping things.”

The board approved amendments to all three aspects of its budget – the Local Fund, which comes from the county level, the State Public School Fund and the Federal Fund.

At the local level, expenditures increased by $28,101 and decreased by $7,820 for a total amended amount of $20,281.

Board of Education expenditures were increased by $8,000; contracted services by $6,000; two entries for substitute pay together increased by $3,356; insurance increased by $3,372 and another $1,142 accounted for increases for FICA, workshop expenses, con-...
From my perspective

Highland’s Board of Commissioners has settled the parking situation downtown, at least for this year. It will be basically unchanged with the exception of the east end of Church Street behind the Presbyterian Church which will no longer have two-hour parking but will remain restricted to employee parking. The Chamber of Commerce had done a study and recommended elimination of all two-hour parking. However, the Board elected to keep the two-hour parking and to continue giving passes to visitors so they could remain in two hour parking longer. The Board did not take the parking situation lightly and after much thought and discussion decided to leave alone what has worked for the last eight years.

At our Town board meeting this past week we also came a step closer to accomplishing our goal of making our Planning and Zoning Department complete. Josh Ward will begin his duties as our Planning and Development Code Enforcement Officer the first week in April. It is a much needed position that the Board has wanted for some time. Josh is from Franklin and currently works for Macon County in a similar position. He is thus very familiar with the area and the problems of building in mountain terrain and will eventually report to a Planning and Development Director. So far we have had quite a few applications for that position of Planning and Development Director and will be most conscientious in determining the right person for Highlands in this important place in our town. Hopefully, within the next month or two we will have in place an expert planning and development person and these personnel positions of the town will be secure.

If you have been watching what is going on behind the Macon Bank, you will know that The Pine Street Park is in last in the first stages of becoming a reality for Highlands. There had been concerns about removing the concrete from the old post office building foundation but this has not been a problem. Soon the new park will have fill to raise it above flood plain levels and grass will be planted. The fund raising campaign is going well. Commissioner Hank Ross says the committee is almost 70% there in its goal to complete the job. All those who are interested in this area as a Town Park are encouraged to step up in finishing this wonderful project for the Town of Highlands. Make your donations so we can complete a project which will add significantly to making our town a great place to live.

The recent announcement of the Highlands-Cashiers Hospital Foundation of its success this past year speaks volumes for the dedication and confidence of the people of Highlands, both permanent and second home owners, in the hard work that has been going on to improve our hospital and make it a place in which we can continue to be proud. Donations are up from the previous year under the capable management of Russell Harris. Once the hospital has obtained a gastroenterologist, the financial situation of the hospital itself should be secure. The hospital has been through a tough year, but we now can see the light at the end of the tunnel. We all appreciate greatly those who have supported our efforts which have been sometimes difficult under undue duress over this past year.

Mayor Don Mullen

On March 19, 2007, Special Olympics of Macon County hosted Field Day for Macon County’s athletes. This is an annual event that allows the athletes a chance to practice for their events, and also to get their event times so that they can be placed in the appropriate time brackets at the Regional Games. I would like to thank the 57 volunteers from many groups that came out to support the 75 athletes at this event including Highlands Rotary and Highlands Interact.

James ready to embark on his future

Highlands School graduate Class of 2006 Allan James, 18, is officially 14 weeks closer to his goal as a Flight Engineer in the U.S. Air Force.

He and 50 other recruits recently completed basic training followed by technical training at Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas. He’s home for some R&R, but April 2, James heads for what is now his home base, Charleston Air Force Base.

James said in basic training recruits are broken down as civilians and then built back up as a military member where they become accustomed to a routine lifestyle and a code of conduct which includes costumes and courtesies in the global community. “Basically, it’s everything you need to become a soldier in the U.S. military,” said James. In the midst of Basic Training, James said he wondered what the heck he was doing, but when it was over and Technical Training began, all doubts disappeared. “I’m loving every minute of this,” he said. “I have no regrets in joining.”

Initially, his parents even questioned his choice to join the military, but they’re all for it now, he said. “And they’re glad my home base is so close to home.”

Leo Albert Blair

Leo Albert Blair was born May 8, 1928 in Barton, VT to Aime P. and Irene Blair. At the age of five his family moved to East Lebanon High School in 1946.

After a short career as a poultry farmer he took over the family business, Blair Construction Company and February 24, 1954 he moved the company and all his employees and family to Delray Beach, FL. He spent the next 40 years as a successful custom home and commercial builder. He changed the face of Delray Beach’s Atlantic Avenue twice.

In 1974-5 Blair Construction built the Sun First National Bank and face lifted Hand’s Book Store, Minor’s Apparel, Vince Canning Shoes and Mercer Wenzel’s. In 1989 he revitalized downtown when he redeveloped the former Arcade Tap Room property into stores, galleries, offices and a smaller restaurant selling the spaces to the shop owners. The risk he took led many others to invest in the now vibrant community.

Blair was a committed community leader. He was one of three founders of the Del-Trail Fire Department where he served on the third member, governor appointed Board of Supervisors for 23 years. He served on the city’s Board of Adjustment, planning and zoning Board, city council and was vice mayor. He was a director of the Del-

Hey guys, somebody's gotta kiss the ugly ones!

Have you seen the TV series "Ugly Betty?" Have you ever dated a girl so ugly that when you brought her home your grass died? Have you ever awakened next to a girl so ugly you would chew off your arm in order to get out without disturbing her? Don't they call them coyote girls?

The directors of "Ugly Betty" hit it right on the head. Bottom line: the ugliest girl in the office is also the wisest, smartest and most efficient. In real life, it's a phenomenon. I know I'm about to get myself in really, really double Dutch knock your socks off big time trouble but so what else is new? I'm calling a frog a frog. Think about it; the most efficient gas around where you work are so ugly that if they stuck their heads out of the office window, they would be arrested for mooning.

I know there must be exceptions to this phenomenon but I know of none. Please write in if you know of a hot babe with a perfect figure who is also super intelligent and efficient at work. Nine times out of 10, if there is such a person, she has bad breath and snores.

When I was in high school, most kids my age wanted to marry a Marilyn Monroe-type who was oversexed, loved fast cars, football and fishing. Of course, her Pa had to own a liquor store. I just couldn't take my eyes off her. She was awesome. That's how folks got to first base in the old days. It's second and third base where problems arise. If sex happens before compatibility, there will be trouble. Write that down. That didn't happen to us and we have stayed together through thick and thin.

Anyway, here's my suggestion. If you're not married, go out and kiss the ugliest girl you can find. Let me know if you line up a 100 % li'l missus that she is the exception to this rule. We have stayed together through thick and thin, and I'm in enough trouble explaining to the kids my age what we happen to us and we have stayed together through thick and thin.

Don't forget to give yourself a profile view. Scary, huh? Make note of how goofy you look. Do you think Catherine Zeta-Jones is going to want to jump your bones? Get real, then go out and find a really, really double Dutch knock your socks off big time trouble but so what else is new? I'm calling a frog a frog. Think about it; the most efficient gas around where you work are so ugly that if they stuck their heads out of the office window, they would be arrested for mooning.

LAUGHING AT LIFE

The Satolah, Georgia, volunteer fire department holds its annual benefit, Saturday, March 31, at the Moccasin precinct firehouse on Route 28. Food served at 5 p.m. ($7 per adult plate, children’s plates, $3.50.) The entertainment starts at 6 p.m. with Foxfire, followed by Curtis Blackwell and the Dixie Bluegrass Boys, two of the most authentic bluegrass bands in these parts. Raffle tickets, $1 for $350 cash, or a .22 rifle or 20-gauge shotgun. The public is invited to this family-friendly event for a good cause.
The Final Four for the men’s NCAA basketball tournament is set, and I don’t care. My journey to indifference followed the reluctant realization that big time college athletics has nothing to do with the mission of the university and everything to do with money — lots of money — money from inflated ticket prices, money from adoring boosters, and most of all, money from television.

The decision by the NBA which virtually forced basketball players to spend at least one year in college was the final step for me. I understand the argument for the current system, which is money. Revenue sports, the argument goes, meaning basketball and football, fund the rest of a university’s athletic programs. Football exists to support women’s field hockey. Sure it does.

A second argument is that football and basketball provide an education for student athletes for whom higher education would otherwise be beyond reach. And believe it or not, some athletes really do get an education, something other than sociology at Duke or sports management everywhere else. Does the fact that some athletes actually get an education justify big time college sports?

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) proclaims, “There are just about 380,000 student athletes and just about every one of them will go pro in something other than sports.” I suppose that is an accurate number. I know of no source other than the NCAA for such information. Fair enough and I’m sure that those athletes are grateful for whatever financial support “revenue sports” provides.

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is consistently rated the best educational value in the country. Part of the reason is that UNC is the number one “college brand” in America. Royalties from sale of baby blue apparel provide academic scholarships for many, many students who could not otherwise afford a college education. Sale of those items is driven not by a great undergraduate education, not by a fine law school or a first-rate medical school, but by basketball. For some, that is justification enough to support the illusion of the student athlete.

Not for me. Not any more. There is the money thing again. Unfortunately, many schools are less successful than UNC, not only on the court but in fund raising as well. In some, football and basketball not only fail to finance the entire athletic budget. They don’t even break even.

I don’t think of myself as a prude or a purist in this matter. My conversion was not an abrupt, but a gradual process, spontaneous, rather than studied, inescapable rather than pursued. For a number of years, I have witnessed an ever increasing commercialization of college sports with a perversion of the academic mission of the university. The hypocrisy finally reached the point that I just lost

Retiree Beverly Cone experienced Italy from a refreshing perspective—the eyes of its younger generation—when she recently took a “volunteer vacation” to teach in the classrooms of the seldom-visited Puglia region.

Cone spent two weeks from mid-February through early March teaching conversational English to Italian youths in the ancient city of Ostuni in the “heel” of Italy’s “boot.” She was part of a team of North American volunteers participating on a project coordinated by Global Volunteers, a nonprofit organization that offers short-term service programs in 19 countries.

By immersing herself in the local culture, she gained unique, non-tourist insights into this fascinating corner of the world. “We shared much of our lives with the students, and in turn, saw first-hand how they live and what is important to them,” said Cone.

During free time, the volunteers explored the region. Excursions encompassed centuries-old churches and castles, medieval villages, vineyards and mysterious caves.

The service program was sponsored by Global Volunteers, a private, non-profit, non-sectarian development organization based in St. Paul, Minn.

At the invitation of local host organizations, Global Volunteers sends teams of volunteers to this community and sites in 19 other countries several times year-round.

Knowing a country’s language beforehand is not necessary. Volunteers are given some basic language lessons while they are in service to help them navigate the cities or towns.

The volunteers pay a tax-deductible fee that ranges from $1,500 to $2,595, air fare excluded. The fee covers all meals, lodging and project expenses. All project-related costs, including airfare, are tax-deductible for U.S. taxpayers.

Fresser’s Eatery wins 2007 WNC Girl Scout Cookie Cook-Off

The WNC cookie lovers have spoken. Fresser’s Eatery in Highlands is the number one vote getter in the 2007 Girl Scout Cookie Cook-Off!

Thirty-six restaurants, bakeries, and ice cream parlors throughout the 15 counties of Western North Carolina created a unique dessert based on one of eight varieties of Girl Scout cookies and then sold the dessert in their eatery during the first two weeks of February. One winner in each of 4 areas of Western North Carolina will be presented with a special First Place plaque by their local Girl Scout Ambassador Troop at special presentation ceremonies being scheduled for April.

A portion of the proceeds from each dessert sale is being donated to Girl Scouts of Western North Carolina Pisgah Council. To date, over $2,720 in donations have been received from the participating restaurants and the Council hopes to top the $3,000 mark.

Fresser’s Eatery in Highlands received 214 votes overall for three dessert creations Peanut Butter Pie (113), Carmel Delite Fried Ice Cream (50) and Raspberry Thin Mint Mousse (51).

- Reflections from Turtle Pond -

My Country — Right or Wrong?

The conservatives are right about something. When John Kerry made his miserable “joke” last year, when he mistakenly said that you had to be stupid to join the military, he was speaking the opinion of many liberals. Some of us do think the members of our armed forces are stupid, because if you weren’t you’d never sign up.

One of the pleasant surprises in two movies I watched recently about our military — “Gunner Palace” and “Jarhead” — was the discovery that there are many fine, intelligent, creative people at the lowest levels of the services. After watching these films I felt much better about who we have representing us on the frontlines around the world.

The director of “Gunner Palace,” Michael Tucker, lived with the 2/3 Field Artillery for two months in 2003. At that time everyone believed the war would soon be over so he thought he had to rush the filming before all the U.S. soldiers left Iraq. When that didn’t happen he returned in early 2004. Gunner Palace is in Baghdad, the bombed-out former palace of Uday, one of Saddam’s sons, now the soldiers’ home.

In the film you travel with the soldiers on patrol and watch them relax around the swimming pool, then hear them speak in revealing one-on-one interviews. You could see some of the soldiers suffering from the pain of killing human beings or from doubt about what they were doing in Iraq. One of the soldiers commented that he had been trained to “defend his country” and that it was clear that this — Iraq — was not about defending his country.

The tension of life patrolling Baghdad is interspersed with funny, entertaining moments created by the soldiers — excellent hip-hop and poetry by some of the black men, and very funny, silly stunts by some of the white men. When the soldiers are breaking into houses looking for “bad guys,” you feel like you’re watching the TV show “Cops.”

Soldiers are put in the position of teaching politics — were they trained for this? One soldier is filmed at a local council meeting. The Iraqis are yelling and the American says, “Remember we’ve been working on civility. Remember, civility, you’ve been doing real good. Don’t yell across the table…”

“Jarhead” is about the first Gulf War [I wonder if in the future they will consider this one war that stretched from 1990-2009(?)] Like “Gunner Palace,” this is a very first-person war account about a marine platoon that was among the first to be sent to Saudi Arabia in 1990. It is based on the book Jarhead: A Marine’s Chronicle of the Gulf War and Other Battles, by Anthony Swofford (956.70445). Swofford is not the stereotyped Marine he reads The Iliad and The Stranger by Camus on the eve of battle.

Swofford also questioned what the war was about. “Do you think oil maybe?” The scenes of the oilfields burning were so vivid in the film I woke up that night from a bad dream of oil and war.

The film was extremely true to the book, but one of my favorite scenes from the book was missing. On the eve of the war, when they still believed they would see battle, one of the soldiers in Swofford’s platoon asked for hugs. Eventually everyone in the platoon hugged the man. I found this very moving. “We are about to die in combat, so why not get one last hug, one last bit of physical contact. And through the hugs Wety has helped make us human again. He’s exposed himself to us, exposed his need, and we in turn have exposed ourselves to him, and for that we are no longer simple grunt savages in the desert ready to jump the berm and begin killing.”

Swofford described the towns his friends were from as “shit towns,” places of failed industry. I remembered that in “Gunner Palace” the filmmaker commented most of the soldiers were from small towns you had never heard of. I guess the military is still a good place to go if there is no opportunity in your hometown.

I really shouldn’t be surprised about the quality of our soldiers. My older brother made a friend in elementary school who became almost a member of our family — in fact, he and his wife still come to our family reunions. Mark was poor compared to us and didn’t have the ability to go to college. He joined the marines and became a drill instructor.

A few years ago I was surprised to hear he had quit the Marines and was attending college, and, most surprising, he was majoring in math! Now he teaches at an inner-city high school and I think of how useful that drill instructor experience must be.

So why is there a prejudice against...
Highlands is on its way to developing a park downtown! With many thanks to the community, the Cashiers-Highlands Land Trust, Macon Bank, the Town, County, and many individual donors - the land for the park site at Pine and Fifth Streets has been almost paid for, and a campaign has begun to acquire additional funds for the development of the park site: planting trees, shrubs, adding a pavilion. Work is now complete removing the asphalt and concrete which previously covered the site, so that grass seed can be sown for a new green space look. Contributions are still needed and are most welcome to help make the park a reality for the Town of Highlands. Please send your tax deductible contributions to the Highlands-Cashiers Land Trust, PO Box 1703, Highlands, NC 28741, marked “for the Pine Street Park.” If you’d like additional information about the park, call Hillrie Quin at 526-2385.

Proceeds from the plant sale also support local landscaping projects and public gardens, including the butterfly garden at Highlands School, the Wertzler Memorial Garden at Town Hall, and ‘Plants of the Cherokee’ — a new garden being developed at the Highlands Nature Center and Biological Station.

“The lush growing conditions in Highlands and Cashiers can make home gardens too full. Digging and dividing perennials now...in early spring...is a great way to get your garden in shape for the rest of the year,” said Carol Strunk, co-chair for the sale. “Help your garden and your community. Superintendent meets with ‘Communications Councils’

Macon County schools superintendent Dan Brigman continues to meet with members of the Superintendents Communications Councils. These groups include faculty and staff members, parents, students, and community leaders, and provide information and feedback to the school leadership team on a quarterly basis. In addition to these focus groups, Macon County Schools recently completed a stakeholders’ survey process. The results of these surveys will be available in the next few weeks and will provide a cornerstone to review district accomplishments and establish goals for the upcoming year. Other requirements fulfilled through this survey process include Southern Association of Colleges & Schools (SACS) and federal reporting associated with title funding.

i’m an incurable romantic, so, of course, i wanted to meet a fella the normal way, in the frozen food section of the supermarket. picture the scene. i’m pushing my shopping cart around the store, minding my own business. i get to the frozen food section. i reach for a bag of frozen peas. at the same time, a charming gentleman reaches for the same bag of frozen peas. our hands touch. our eyes lock. i look to see what’s in his shopping cart. it’s exactly what’s in mine. we know.

this may come as a shock to you, but before i googled john on the internet, i tried finding my match on eharmony. yup. i’d gotten tired of walking around my neighborhood in manhattan, seeing men peering out of bars, tongues lolling out, ogling air-headed bimbos in their 20s. and me with my master’s degree and a good job as a banker? nada. these men didn’t want women with more brains than god gave a grapefruit. they wanted eye-candy and breeders.

yes, dear readers, men also have biological clocks that tick, and they tick loud and fast among men in their 40s and 50s who have played the field so long they know the bartender’s kids by name. after messing around for 20 years, they realize that their parents aren’t getting any younger, and neither are they. if children and grandchildren are going to come into the picture, they have to have longer stands than general custer.

these men are so much fun to watch. they go about finding marriage material the way they would pick out a new computer. i’m surprised that they haven’t begged consumer reports to add a dating section. the ads they place all contain the same elements. the women they want are invariably “model thin” and a good 10-25 years younger than themselves. the sad thing is that these women are supposed to stay “model thin” while producing the heirs to fill those lofts and duplex apartments. thus, the “basketball pregnancy.”

new york women are supposed to gain a minimum of weight during their pregnancies. no puffy faces or swollen ankles here, folks. no, these perfect little wives are supposed to look like they have slipped a perfectly round little basketball underneath their designer maternity wear. the paint is barely dry in the nursery, and already they are back in the gym, sweating and starving themselves back into shape. and for whom? a middle-aged banker with a paunch and a comb-over.

so, after years of being invisible, i decided to embrace modernity, and look for love on an internet dating service. since i’d heard that eharmony was a classy organization, i signed on for a trial membership. their questions were very comprehensive and extensive. i was impressed. what was i looking for? a man with a sense of humor, smart, reasonably attractive, around my age, or a few years older. i wanted someone with a strong sense of family, since mine is very important to me. i wasn’t fussy about whether the man had been married before, was divorced, widowed, or never married (although at my age, this did arouse a certain amount of suspicion). oh, and i asked that he live within 60 miles of me. i didn’t ask that he live within the same zip code. my criteria didn’t seem unreasonable at all.

well, obviously they were, since eharmony got back to me, and told me that nowhere within a 60 mile radius of new york city was there any man fitting this description. not one. i was floored. after all, i hadn’t asked for a nobel scientist, a millionaire, or an aging chippendale. i just wanted a nice guy with a job, a bit of hair, most of his own teeth, and the ability to laugh at my jokes. it didn’t seem like rocket science.

so, now i watch those eharmony ads with a certain amount of irony. while delighted for those blissful, happy couples on tv, i know that i had better luck looking through an old photo album, looking for my heart’s desire. it’s a pity, though. i had a coupon for those frozen peas.

March madness!

I have to preface this by saying I’m writing it a week early because I’ll be out of pocket for several days. If things seem disjointed time-wise, please understand.

I admit my mind is still pretty messed up after researching last week’s column on Global Cooling/Warming and I don’t have an original thought in my head, so I just punched in the title and we’ll see what happens together.

Madness #1. The insanity within the Congress is getting into high gear. The despicable Democrats, who evidently don’t have the guts (or the votes) to deny funding for the war, have attached all sorts of non-war related pork projects to the current Iraq spending bill. Pelosi is preparing to put to a vote a bill which includes a troop move-out date of August 31, 2008. It also includes $29 BILLION in PORK among which is $60,000,000,000 for Pacific Coast salmon fishermen, $25,000,000 for Salinas Valley spinach growers and $65,000,000 for peanut storage. This is being done by the high and mighty demos who blasted the last Congress for the same thing. Bush says he’ll veto it if it comes to him with strings. Well see.

Madness #2. The Anna Nicole Smith saga drones on. After several weeks, they still haven’t got a plan to find out “who’s her daddy?” Try as I may to keep the news on this subject out of my sight, in our house it can’t be done. The other night, I saw an interview with her father who brought a previously hushed issue out on the table — MURDER! That ought to be good for another month or two. I vaguely remember something about a judge in the case breaking down on the bench and bawling, about what I have no clue. Now enter another Florida judge who evidently had something to do with the DNA hearing in Hollywood, FL who got busted for smoking pot in a local park. Oh my.

Madness #3. Attorney General Gonzales is on the hot seat (he may be gone by the time you read this) for dismissing eight U.S. attorneys. This is a crock concocted by the demos in order to get Karl Rove and Harriet Miers to testify under oath about who knows what. It certainly won’t be about Bill Clinton’s wholesale firing of 93 U.S. attorneys to get rid of one who was going to prosecute him and Hillary for the Whitewater debacle. The demos speaking to a couple of congressional committees this week (last week by the time you read this) on his favorite subject, global warming. I know February isn’t March, but it’s close enough. Please cut me some slack. Quotes from selected newspapers: Roanoke “coldest February in history;” Chicago “9th coldest February in 137 years;” Philadelphia a “coldest February since Carter was president;” Toronto “coldest February in 28 years;” Ft. Wayne “3rd coldest February in history;” Austin “record cold February;” Indianapolis “among the five coldest Februaries.” You get the idea. While I realize one month doesn’t prove the point, global warming is MADNESS!

Madness #4. Here we are, 10+ months ahead of super duper Tuesday which effectively ends the primary issue and more than a year and a half before the election, and we have 30+ folks running around the country in a frenzy raising money, kissing babies and generally making fools of themselves, hoping to become PRESIDENT! Who in their right mind (aha) would want to be PRESIDENT? Good grief, Clinton got skewered (pun intended) for his various felonious activities by a hostile Republican Congress. And now, Bush must feel like a piece of meat on a rotisserie, being basted by the demos on a daily basis. It appears that governmental warfare is in vogue and the prez is the piñata. So who in their right mind?

Personally, I’m all for madness in small doses well spaced but things are getting out of hand. Costa Rica is starting to look pretty good to me and New Zealand has a certain appeal. I think some serious research is in order just in case the unthinkable happens. That, of course, would be President Clinton II. I shudder at the thought. Thank God the “sweet sixteen” is coming up this weekend (the Final Four to you) to interject a little sanity into our lives.
Annual mission going well

By Dr. John Baumrucker

Sunday was one of those special days. First we went to the church service at the Dios Es Amor. We were given the opportunity to speak to the congregation, interact with the church members and enjoy the sermon and songs. Since the time was growing short for the dental team, I took them to the foster home to see the boys and the grounds, and also eat lunch there. The house mother prepared us all different kinds of finger foods, such as bananas or plantain plus rice, and completed the meal. They knew that we don’t eat leafy greens here.

A few of the group went to Santa Cruz for a meeting but I returned to play with the kids. I love playing with my boys. We had a successful soccer practice and a good game. Then we played made-up games in the playground. There are several areas where your imagination can find new games. There is a place where old tires are buried half way in the ground, separating the play area from the parking lot. That area in particular was the source of new games. My first real job in 1960 was being a playground leader and that experience has served me well here.

I had hoped to write the journal before I forgot some things as this was a busy weekend, but other things got in the way. Nancy Main and I had a long discussion about the micro-finance project and whether it would be a Bible-based program or a business-based one. The business-based plan has worked before but the Bible-based one, to my knowledge, has not been tried. We will decide on the path tomorrow when we meet for lunch. Since we gave the cook a night off, I have not seen her to tell her that she might expect an additional 15 to 20 people for lunch. She has always taken this in stride before, but I hate to do this to her.

Soon it was time to go to the various churches for activities that had been planned. As I left I noticed we had a flat tire. I had traveled about a ½ block before noticing the characteristic noise of the tire. What next, I thought. Two tires in a week! We changed the tire in about a ½ hour, not being familiar with the jack and it was dark. We had to find a few bricks to elevate the jack enough to put on the spare tire.

I thought how impossible this would have been if we had been in the mud yesterday when the tire went flat. We still arrived at the first church before their bus which was supposed to have left a ½ hour earlier. This is typical Bolivia. God knows what would happen and we were on His timetable.

We did our business there and went to a small Presbyterian church where Michelle Main was supposed to do some skits. The service was over, but there were still people there as we arrived. Those remaining were mainly deaf mutes who were signing with one another. What a perfect place to do the skits that really need no words or explaining. They did have several hearing signs who translated the Spanish to signs as our translator changed the English to Spanish.

I had previously planned to leave to write in my journal and then come back, but I was glad I stayed. Here were all these people who could not hear or talk, but I have never seen so many happy people. I was enthralled by the enthusiasm of one man in particular. Also their children, all of whom seemed able to speak and hear. They were some of the happiest children I have ever seen. These people had practically no possessions and then God seemed to have taken away even what little they had left, e.g. their senses, but they were happier than many people I know who are blessed with much.

I think this is the reason I like this place so much and why everyone else enjoys being here too. It is way past midnight as I write, but I don’t care. It was a great weekend!

Stay tuned!

Vital health screening and this story could save your life

By Martha Betz

On February 14, my dad, Alan Lewis, age 76, of Highlands, had a routine health screening that saved his life.

The Abdominal Aortic Aneurysm (AAA) screening showed he had an aneurysm the size of a grapefruit! He was told to go straight to the nearest emergency room, as this was a life-threatening matter.

The occurrence of Abdominal Aortic Aneurisms (AAA) has tripled over the past three decades. This is a frightening statistic for a condition that often occurs without recognizable symptoms.

AAA is the most common type of aortic aneurism. They occur in the abdominal section — lower section — of the aortic artery. Like other aneurisms, AAAs are immediately caused by a weakness in the aortic wall which bulges under the influence of blood pressure.

In the United States ruptured abdominal aortic aneurisms are responsible for an estimated 15,000 deaths per year. This fact makes aneurism rupture one of the leading causes of death in the United States. If an aneurism does rupture, massive internal hemorrhaging is usually the result. Death will normally occur within hours.

Fortunately a simple, non-invasive test saved my dad’s life. He underwent four hours of vascular surgery in Asheville, N.C., and although the surgery went well, he developed some complications, including a blood clot in his leg, which lengthened his hospital stay to two weeks. Thankfully he is now home, but still faces several months of recovery time. My mother, Jane Lewis, also had the health screening, and was given a clean bill of health.

Generally speaking, aortic aneurisms occur among the older generation. Specifically, over 75% of diagnosed aortic aneurisms are found in people beyond the age of 60. It has been estimated that one in 250 people over the age of 50 will die of a ruptured AAA.

If you have never had the simple non-invasive test, I urge you to schedule an appointment — it could literally save your life!
Local ventures to England to learn age-old craft

By Kim Lewicki

You've read about them in books, seen them in countless movies, but have you ever wondered how they're made? Allan Frederick did.

Thatched roofs on English cottages are part of the romantic English countryside image and represent an age-old craft that is both artistic and skillful in nature.

"That's one of the reasons learning how to thatch a roof was appealing to me," said Allan Frederick. "It's a physical skill with an artistic component to it." The fact that his mother is English may have tipped him in that direction, too.

The last week in February, Frederick gave up his day job as manager of Highlands-Cashiers rehabilitation services and traveled to Bovey Tracey in Devon, England to learn the art of thatching from master thatchers brothers Robin and John Singleton.

I emailed them and volunteered my services and they volunteered to teach me," said Frederick. "They put me to work immediately."

Considered extremely labor-intensive, the number of thatched buildings in England decreased from one million in 1800 to 35,000 by 1960, due partly to mechanization and transport enabling other materials to be used like slate. Today there are around 24,000 thatched buildings listed in England and for those who want to keep the traditional English timber-framed thatched look and keep their homes on the historical register, thatched roofs are the only way to go. With value placed on the "historical" these days, thatchers — particularly those in Devon which is known for thatched roofs — are in demand. Frederick said the Singleton brothers don't want for work.

Technically a thatched roof is a roof made with a plant material such as reeds or palm fronds, but for the Singletons nothing but wheat straw grown particularly for thatching will do. Wheat straw is a premium material because of its length and the thickness of its reed wall.

Rather than storing materials on site, nearby farmers deliver the wheat straw as needed, rain or shine. "If it started raining we just put on raincoats and kept on working," said Frederick.

Depending on the quality of work, thatching can last 10-20 years. New bundles of thatching is typically 2-4 feet thick and lies on top of the old thatch which can be up to eight feet thick. The pitch of the roof is one main reason thatching lasts so long and why the roofs don't leak. "The rain runs right off," said Frederick.

Once the bundles are delivered to the site, thatchers split them in two, and after evening them by dropping them on the ground a few times, a chainsaw is used to make all the reeds in the bundle the same length. After worn thatch patches are removed from the roof, bundles are carried up a ladder and laid on top of the old thatching. Eaves and framework are also repaired if needed.

Wooden staples — usually hazel spars — are used to hold the thatch in place. Finally, thatching paddles are used to even out and contour the bundles once fixed. Hazel wood is used extensively for thatching, in particular for the making of spars, because it can be split into quadrants from the round, which are then sharpened at each end and twisted in the middle to make a staple.

Frederick said the days were long and the work was intensive but time for tea and socializing was always made. "The owner of the house brought us a cup of tea in china cups each day and at night we'd go have a beer in the pub," he said. "It was about as English as you get."

been done and some regulations automatically apply while others don’t,” he said. “The town’s soil erosion ordinance and the subdivision ordinance which outlines setback and road widths are already in affect, but lot sizes, uses and zoning designations haven’t been determined.”

Several members of the Wilson family – owners of land on NC 28 south across the road from the ETJ areas of Clear Creek, were present and voiced concerns felt by many in the ETJ areas about maintaining their lifestyle within the parameters of ETJ.

Like several landowners in the ETJ areas, the Wilsons said they had been farming and working their land for 150 years. They said the land they had left was destined for cattle, pasture to extend and barns to build and they don’t want anyone telling them they can’t do those things.

“In years to come, I don’t want you telling me what I can and can’t do. I fought for freedom of this nation and now our freedoms are being taken away from us,” said Clarence Wilson. The Wilson property isn’t in the ETJ area but they suspect it will be someday and are speaking about a lifestyle they want protected.

Wilson also said he hunts regularly and is concerned about firearm and noise ordinances prohibiting him from continuing.

Betz said there are only firearm and noise ordinances within the town limits and all the activities he described were allowed in the R1 district – should it be zoned that way but it was too early to tell what the zoning would be.

Board member Pat Taylor reminded the board that early in the ETJ process Commissioner Amy Patterson made it clear that current lifestyles, such as farming and the raising of livestock, shouldn’t be disturbed or curtailed in any way by ETJ.

“We may need a different zone -- an agricultural zone – for Clear Creek and Horse Cove,” said Taylor.

Luther Turner, who owns about 40 acres in Horse Cove, said he has a petition signed by 24 property owners declaring support of ETJ in the cove.

“We are concerned about 20, 30, 40 years down the road,” he said. “I have 40 acres and I’m sure my children will end up developing the property and I just want to make sure it is done attractively. This is important to the future of Horse Cove.”

But Planning Board member Mitch Gurganus, who also is a resident of Horse Cove, said he has letters from nine major landowners in the cove who don’t want ETJ.

In the end, the board agreed to work up an agricultural zone for Clear Creek and Horse Cove and to meet April 16 at 5:30 p.m. Betz said GIS Engineer Matt Schuler will produce large maps of those areas clearly depicting the parcels. The board also asked the Wilsons to return to help them identify property ownership and uses.

investigation and after conferring with the District Attorney’s office, the decision was made to file criminal charges against the officer.

“After reviewing the findings, I support the decision made by the agencies conducting the criminal investigation and appreciate their professional conduct in handling this matter,” said Sheriff Holland.

Following the SBI investigation, Macon County deputies arrested Mercier on (1) felony count of larceny by an employee and (1) misdemeanor count of possession of a schedule II controlled substance and he appeared before magistrate Brandon McDowell.

Following being processed into the Macon County Detention Center, Mercier was released on a $5,000 unsecured bond and is scheduled to appear in District Court on April 4.

“It is difficult to see one of our own arrested, booked and processed into our facility, but as officers we have an obligation to uphold the laws of this state impartially,” said Sheriff Holland. “Criminal activity by members of the MCSO will not be tolerated. I, along with my officers, should be and will be held accountable for our actions.”

Mercier was immediately terminated by Sheriff Holland and is no longer employed by the Macon County Sheriff’s Office. Due to North Carolina laws pertaining to “personnel matters,” Sheriff Holland will not make any additional comments at this time.
Smaller hi-rise planned for U.S. 64 tract

The dust has settled concerning the transaction of property on U.S. 64 east where a high-rise condominium complex was planned. Now, the buyer is ready to move forward with his plans for Highlands Views.

Though a cloud still exists on the 19-acre deed regarding the allowance of multi-story condominium structures, Friday, March 16, developer Bill Shephard closed on the two original tracts involved for a total of 21-plus acres.

On the front 1.3 acres – the tract without a cloud on the deed – a four-story building housing 23, three-bedroom, 2,400-2,600 sq. ft. condominium units is planned.

If the court removes the cloud on the deed for the remaining 19 acres, Shephard said the building will be constructed there for a total of 40-46 units.

The case is set to go to court early in May.

If allowed, the second condominium building will be built on a knoll of land where the first settlers on the property originally located.

Either way, Shephard is moving forward. "I hope the pending suit goes in the right direction and I can build the second building, but if it doesn't, I will build the one condominium building and a duster development of 19 homes on the 19-acres instead. I prefer to duster because it doesn't destroy the environment," he said.

Almost all of the condominium units - 95 percent - will have a view of Shortoff Mountain. Parking will be dug out under the building which will include a spa, indoor pool, meeting rooms and storage rooms for each condominium unit. The first floor of the four-story unit will be on ground level.

Regardless of what ends up on the overall tract, Shephard plans hiking trails, picnic areas and a putting green for the property.

He and his architect, Dan Buncombe of Cashiers, are working up a smaller version of the original plan utilizing wood, stone and timbers.

"I understand height was an issue on the original plans, but it was never going to look like a Miami complex as depicted by someone," said Shephard.

As long as he adheres to Macon County's building ordinance height restriction he said the county's planning department is behind the project 100 percent.

There is a moratorium on multi-story buildings capping them at 48 feet. Meanwhile the Macon County Planning Board is working on the revision of the ordinance.

"The maximum building height on any building structure or unit within the jurisdiction of Macon County shall not exceed 48 feet or four stories, whichever is greater," reads the proposed ordinance.

At its planning board meeting in February, Macon County Building Inspector Jack Morgan said the language in the first sentence is confusing. The board is working on its clarification.

Shephard said his sales office will go up in the next three to four months and he plans to begin selling condominium units in the first building prior to beginning construction.

Audit shows community still believes in hospital

The hospital foundation doesn't know exactly why, but despite a rocky year, donations were up for 2005-2006.

"During last year's period of turmoil we had more contributions than the previous year," said Highlands-Cashiers Hospital Foundation board member Clem Patton. "We don't know if people were stepping up or if we had been free of turmoil it would have been even better year."

Current assets of the foundation for fiscal year 2006 (Oct. 1, 2005-Sept. 30, 2006) were $20.75 million, down from $21.9 in 2005. But that's not a true picture of the state of affairs.

The foundation picked 2006 to clean up is assets and liabilities – basically write off unfulfilled pledges instead of keeping them on the books as assets as it had in years past.

"We still have a reserve for a certain amount of uncollected pledges that we are sure are coming in and we count that as an asset, but we've become much more conservative or rather more realistic regarding payment," said Patton. "Now the books show what we are more certain of actually getting."

In the "long-term unconditional promises to give" column, for 2005-2006, after the adjustment — $296,687 is listed; for 2005 that figure was $3,856,106.

Most of the uncollected pledges are left over from the 1999-2000 Challenge Campaign where $27 million was originally pledged. That figure was rounded down to $22 million by the time the dust settled. They wrote off $3.6 million.

Money in the foundation's capital fund is used to purchase equipment and make other infrastructure improvements for the hospital while the endowment principal is untouched it is interest bearing.

Typically, including purchases and infrastructure upkeep, the hospital goes to the foundation for about $2 million a year – but it can be more.

"The hospital requires a subsidy to operate," said Patton. "So far the foundation has had the means to carry the hospital through. We received more donations in 2006 than 2005 and for that trend to continue we need the confidence and support of the community. We'll need more years like last year to continue."

Patton said it's getting harder and harder to provide healthcare in this country. Hospitals need certainty to continue rather than approaching operations with a "pay as you go" mentality. The foundation supplies the underpinning the hospital needs.

Last year the foundation funded the purchase of the MRI machine. This year the hospital is looking to the foundation for a nuclear imaging camera for about $500,000 and additional plant improvements.

Included in the foundation's assets column is $3.7 million that represents the eight acres purchased in Cashiers to expand facilities there at some point. Patton said it's likely the hospital won't need the eight acres and part of that will be eventually sold off.

Due to the backing of the foundation, Highlands-Cashiers Hospital can offer the community services beyond what a community of its size and Cashiers' typically sees.

Russell Harris, director of the hospital foundation said his donor list is growing.

"We had 176 new donors in 2006 and about 90 more people gave in November of 2006 than in November of 2005."

In addition, he said the average gift of $90 is up so there are more donors giving a higher amount.

"There is a generosity of the people here who know that for this facility to continue they have to step up to the plate," said Patton. "The community is willing to support at a level not normally seen by hospitals."

Harris agreed. "Highlands has deep donor support. The hospital can be what the community is willing to support. But encouragement is the essential ingredient for people to continue to give and to come back and give," he said.

Hugh Spruill, vice-chair of the foundation board said the more people living in the Highlands-Cashiers area the better it will be for the hospital.

"We have a better chance to have a healthy foundation and a viable hospital as more people move here," he said.

Spruill said the hardships the hospital went through last year represents a period of adjustment that can be attributed to the hospital growing bigger and people expecting a certain quality of care at the hospital.

"We have moved into another mode. It's not just enough to have a hospital in town, anymore. Expectations have moved up. But moving up isn't easy. There are growing pains when moving to the next level," he said. "But we have moved successfully to that next level."

Patton said he has great confidence in this hospital. "It was here when I needed it and able to do what I needed it to do. It's the best hospital care anywhere." - KL
NC Stage’s Shakespeare Troupe to perform at Highlands School Monday, April 2

Group to perform for 15,000 students in 22 days

North Carolina Stage Company will serve almost 15,000 students 22 days through a high profile school tour of Shakespeare’s A Midsummer Night’s Dream. The tour will travel to nine Western NC counties. NC Stage’s production is a part of Shakespeare for A New Generation, a national theater initiative sponsored by the National Endowment for the Arts in cooperation with Arts Midwest. NC Stage was one of only 36 theatres across the country and the only North Carolina theatre to receive this grant.

The tour will take place over just three weeks, March 12 – April 2, meaning the cast will perform two shows a day on average and even three on some days. Students in Macon, Transylvania, Henderson, Polk, Buncombe, Madison, Yancey, Mitchell and McDowell counties will see an energetic, abridged version of Shakespeare’s classic comedy. A question and answer session follows each performance for those attending. Immediately following the performance package, selected students at each school will have their choice of taking a workshop on Shakespeare’s language or stage combat.

In addition, 25% of the schools have elected to bring a Shakespeare residency to their students. In Page to Stage, NC Stage’s residency program, professional teaching arts lead a variety of hands-on activities that explore Shakespeare’s language, plot and characters. Far from stuffy, these residencies feature exercises like “Shakespearean Insults”, in which students revel in Shakespeare’s language, creating phrases like, “Thou dissembling, dizzy-eyed coxcomb.”

Eight young actors tackle all the roles in A Midsummer Night’s Dream, switching quickly between Athenian nobility, fairies of the forest and rustic craftsmen. In one of Shakespeare’s lightest comedies, Helena loves Demetrius, who is engaged to Hermia, who adores Lysander. When the young lovers escape to the woods, they unknowingly walk into a battle of wills between the King and Queen of the fairies. The production features costumes inspired by Indian and punk rock styles, as well as the surprising use of a RipStik skateboard. The music is a dizzying mix of old and new, from Bach to Christina Aguilera.

Director Ron Bashford has directed back-to-back shows in Asheville this spring: All In the Timing for NC Stage and Tom Stoppard’s Arcadia for Warren Wilson College. Bashford has been responsible for some of NC Stage’s most popular plays, including Hedwig and the Angry Inch, Hamlet, and Art. For this production, Bashford trimmed Shakespeare’s script to 80 minutes, while keeping the original language and story intact.

A Midsummer Night’s Dream features eight young actors from Asheville and across the country: Mike Coghlan, Jonathan Frappier, Lauren Fortuna, Willie Repoley, Hannah Sloat, Vivian Smith, Marcus Truschinski, and Matthew Winning. After the school tour concludes, A Midsummer Night’s Dream will run April 11 – 29, 2007 in its expanded version full length at NC Stage’s theatre in downtown Asheville.

‘Highlander Pride’ tennis club

Under the watchful eye of Highlands School Guidance Counselor Thomas Jessup, Highlands School students are participating in a school tennis club. With enough interest, the club could evolve into a varsity sport, but Jessup said for now, it’s a club. “We’re a club, not a varsity sport because I wanted to start slow and build interest to see if we could field a girl’s team in fall and boy’s next spring,” he said.

The co-ed club practices Tuesday and Thursday at the Rec Park from 4-5:30 p.m. “I have very limited skills and knowledge of the game,” said Jessup, “but we’re working on swing, grip, score keeping, names of parts of the court — very basic stuff.”

So far four regulars show up and four students show up now and then, but Jessup said it’s a start. “They’re a group of kids I’m sure there is some real talent up here, it’s just that many students don’t know about the club and others are playing other sports this spring.”

Jessup urges any community member who likes tennis and would like to help out to join the club Tuesdays and Thursdays at the Rec Park. Financial assistance is also needed. Currently the club is using last year’s “Flat balls” for practice. For more information, contact Jessup at thomas.jessup@mcsk-12.org.

Each eight-week session includes:

• A medical assessment to uncover any underlying disorders that may hinder your efforts to reach a healthy weight. Includes blood tests, physical exam, risk assessment, cardiovascular screening, preliminary EKG, and body composition analysis.

• One-on-one consultations with the physician and dietician.

• Eight 90-minute sessions offering support, education, and counseling.

• Thirty-visit membership to HealthTracks fitness and wellness center.

“To sing in choir’s Good Friday performance”

Father Brian Sullivan, rector of Highlands Episcopal Church of the Incarnation, has many other talents in addition to shepherding his flock and preaching outstanding sermons.

Father Sullivan utilizes his talents as an artist in designing many of the church’s visual aids used in promotion and publicity. He was an art major at the University of Georgia before he entered the Seminary.

In addition to this ability, he also sings the mass on occasion and is a regular member of the church choir. Fletcher Wolfe, choir director, says that Brian has a luminous and very love-ly tenor voice. He attends weekly choir rehearsals regularly and during the choir’s anthem presentation on Sunday morning he trades his place at the altar for a role as tenor in the choir.

The Lenten and Easter season sees Father Sullivan presiding over the many services held at the church, as well as delivering inspirational and spirit-filled homilies.

He resides in Highlands with his decorator wife, Mindy, and their three small children, Asa 4 ½, Lexie 2 ½, and Maggie 1. Also, living at their home, is an Italian hunting dog named “Neo” and two cats.

Father Sullivan, an avid biker and fisherman, will appear with the Incarnation choir on Good Friday evening, April 6, in their presentation of Theodore Dubois’ beautiful “Seven Last Words of Christ.” This performance, to be directed by Fletcher Wolfe, will commence at 7 p.m. and everyone is invited to attend.

Reverend Bruce Shortell to visit Christ Anglican Church on Palm Sunday

The Reverend Bruce Shortell, former canon of The Cathedral of St. Philip in Atlanta, will preach and celebrate Holy Communion at Christ Anglican Church on Palm Sunday, April 1. Services will be at 2:00 p.m. at Community Bible Church. Rev. Shortell is one of several distinguished Anglican priests making a trip to Highlands this spring, and he will be accompanied by his wife, Carolyn. His sermon will touch on appreciating, and benefiting from, our preparation for Easter, and how this preparation can be applied to our lives during and after the Easter season.

Rev. Shortell served at The Cathedral of St. Philip, at the time the largest Episcopal Church in the United States, for 17 years until retirement in 1998. He served as Canon for Ministries and Canon Pastor. After his son-in-law died, he studied the grief process and has helped numerous people see that Good Friday, Holy Saturday, and Easter provide a useful paradigm for all of life’s losses.

He is presently Fleet Chaplain at the University Yacht Club at Lake Lanier in Georgia.

Rev. Shortell grew up in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania and graduated from Moravian College. After a career with Bethlehem Steel Corporation he felt the nudge of the Lord calling him to ordained ministry. He received his Master of Divinity from Virginia Theological Seminary and served two parishes in Pennsylvania.

Over the span of his ministry Rev. Shortell developed a deep personal relationship with Jesus and renewed his commitment to Him as Lord. Eventually this led to working with the National Church as a Regional Associate for Evangelism and Renewal and traveling around the country leading conferences to help parishes regain their vision for Evangelism and Renewal.

The Very Reverend David B. Collins, Dean Emeritus of The Cathedral of St. Philip follows Rev. Shortell at Christ Anglican Church and will conduct both Good Friday and Easter services.
The importance of belief

I heard someone not long ago talking about his dislike of theology and doctrine. This person was a professing Christian. I wondered as I listened to him how he could profess to believe in Jesus Christ and not understand the importance of theology and doctrine. Theology is a word that comes to us from the Greek language. It is made up of two words: theos which means God and logos which means word. Literally it is God’s Word. How can God’s Word not be important to one who professes to believe in him? Doctrine also comes to us from the Greek. It is derived from the word didasko which means to teach. When used in relationship to the Church it means to teach God’s Word. Is that not exactly what Jesus told us to do in the Great Commission to “go and make disciples of all nations . . . teaching them to obey everything I have commanded you.” How can any true believer not want to grow in his doctrine, so he can be a more effective witness for their Lord and Savior?

It is a great tragedy that in our modern times and in many modern Churches these two words have been thrown out. Christianity is about faith and faith, simply put, is believing God. The Apostle Paul says in Romans 4:3, “Abraham believed God and it was credited to him as righteousness.” Jesus told the crowds in John 6:29, “The work of God is this to believe in the one he has sent.” Jesus in John 3:16 says “whoever believes in him will not perish but have everlasting life.” Believing is the heart of what Christianity is all about. Jesus was sent into this world to do for the sinner what he could never do for himself. He came and lived the perfect life on behalf of all those the Father gave him. He took that perfect life and offered it as an atoning sacrifice on the altar of God for the forgiveness of all who would believe and trust in him and in him alone. He went to the grave and paid the final price for their sin which is death. But, he did not stay there, he defeated death through his resurrection. He returned to heaven to take his place at the Father’s right hand to intercede for his people. This is what Christians are called to believe. This is theology. This is God’s Word. It is doctrine. Which every Christian should know and teach to others.

Theology and doctrine are important. It is important what you believe, what you hold to as truth. Yes, you must live your beliefs, if they are to have any kind of positive impact on others. James says “faith without works is dead” but works without faith are worthless. Belief is the foundation to good works. Paul says in Ephesians 2:8-10 “For it is by grace you have been saved, through faith – and this not from yourselves, it is the gift of God - not by works, so that no one can boast. For we are God’s workmanship, created in Christ Jesus to do good works, which God prepared in advance for us to do.” God’s Word says you are saved by God’s grace and that once you have that salvation, you are enabled to believe that Jesus Christ has done for you everything you could not do for yourself. You are thus being remade into his image and enabled to begin doing the good works he prepared in advance for you to do. What are those good works? They begin with holding to the theology of the Scripture and teaching the doctrines of Jesus Christ.

Nothing is more important to the believer than what he believes. Just as Abraham was justified by his belief, so will you be justified by what you believe. Don’t be foolish and think you can get into heaven by works. Jesus makes clear in John 10:38 what is required to enter heaven. “Whoever believes in him is not dominated, but whoever does not believe stands condemned already because he has not believed in the name of God’s one and only Son.” Theology and doctrine are two of the most important things for a Christian to know and understand. Believe and you will be saved. That is theology and doctrine all rolled into one clear and simple belief and it must be held to, loved and appreciated by all who call themselves followers of Jesus Christ.

“Each increase is specifically for a specific area,” said Finance Director Betty Waldrop. “Every bit of that money is for a specific program and we have to use it for those things.”
The decrease of $7,820 were due to $1,500 in after-school salaries; $450 in non-capitalized equipment; $3,622 in food; $500 for tires and tubes; $300 in instructional supplies; $1,448 in workshop expenses.
Local revenues increased by $20,281 — $5,000 from Medicaid, $2,281 from the Summer Enventure Program and $10,000 from fines and forfeitures.

interest. Coaches routinely make 10 times as much as university presidents. If one can comfortably justify that vast discrepancy on the basis of the income that successful athletic teams produce for the institution, then why don’t we pay the athletes who are most responsible for victories on the field or court. Apologists claim that the athletes are being paid in the form of an academic opportunity worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. But the NCCA, the NBA, and the NFL didn’t ask the athletes if they prefer education or money. If I thought for a single minute that the motivation was to introduce the athlete to higher education or to reduce the physical stress on the young athlete while he achieved musculo-skeletal maturity, or to shelter him for a year or two while he reaches emotional maturity, I might feel differently. I don’t. Athletes are “meat” for college coaches, fund raisers and boosters. Eligibility rules provide gladiators for the universities and a proving ground, or minor league, for the professional leagues. Why deny football and basketball players the option of going pro as soon as a professional team is willing to pay them? Those who are not tapped by the pros and offered millions may choose to represent a college and settle for thousands. They could be offered a tuition waiver, if they are interested, and accept free tuition as part of a compensation package. The stadiums and field houses are being paid for. The uniforms have been purchased. The system needs only athletes to fill the uniforms and seats and share in the profits they make possible. Those who choose education will have truly earned their degrees and restored a measure of integrity to a corrupt system. You don’t think it can work. Of course not. It would require abandoning the charade of the amateur athlete and paying the players for their effort. It would necessitate acknowledging that the athletic department is not an integral part of the university, exists to raise money, and has nothing else to do with education. And the truth is, in highly successful programs like UNC, Notre Dame and Ohio State, college sports raise a lot more money than car washes and bake sales.

Hospital’s annual free health screenings to begin April 21

Registration is already under way for the first free community health screening of the season, set for April 21 in Highlands. Again this year Highlands-Cashiers Hospital will be hosting four community screenings, two in Highlands (April 21 and Sept. 15) and two in Cashiers (May 19 and Aug. 25). All the dates are Saturdays.

And as in the past, the screenings are free to everyone. However, there are several changes in the works this year. The location for the Highlands events is among those changes. While the Highlands screenings will still be held at the Jane Woodruff Clinic (on the hospital campus), the cashiers events will move down one floor – to Suite 104 on the first level.

Many of the core screening tests will still be offered, such as height, weight, blood pressure, and lab tests for glucose and cholesterol levels, but several other stations are being changed or eliminated to keep pace with health care trends and reduce the time required for participants to go through the process.

“We are constantly evaluating the tests and information we offer to make the screenings as relevant and up to date as possible,” said President and CEO Ken Shull. “We are beginning our 13th year of offering free screenings, and we remain very committed to this part of our mission to improve the health of our communities.”

Between 400 and 500 area residents participate in the four to five community screenings offered each year, but there is room for far more.

“We would like to see more people take advantage of these screenings. There is no cost for any of the tests,” observed Skip Taylor, director of Community Relations for the hospital. “And this year we are working with the Community Care Clinic in Highlands, not only to try to reach a larger audience, but also to make sure those who have some type of health issue, and who may not be able to afford medical care themselves, receive the follow-up care they need through the clinic.”

One major difference in the screenings this time around involves how participants will be assessed for obesity. The hospital will no longer be testing for body fat. Instead exercise and nutrition counselors will focus on body mass index, a ratio of height to weight.

“BMI (body mass index) is really the standard tool being used throughout the health care industry to evaluate obesity,” says Yvonne Smith, RD, MS, CDE, director of HealthTracks at the hospital. “We’ve used both BMI and actual body fat measurement in the past, but that is something of a duplication. Eliminating the body fat test will also help participants move through the screening process much faster.”

For those who still want to have their body fat level checked, the hospital plans to offer free vouchers to be measured at HealthTracks at a later date.

Preliminary testing that helps assess one’s risk for osteoporosis is also being changed this year. Ultrasound ankle tests will no longer be offered at any of the health screenings.

“We made the decision to drop this particular test because so many of the participants who attended last year’s events had already had it done,” explained Taylor. “Once you’ve had the test, there is no reason to repeat it, since the information it provides is very limited. It’s not cost-effective for the folks from the Osteoporosis Outreach Program at Haywood Regional Medical Center to drive from Clyde to see so few people.”

Seventy-five to 80 percent of those who attended last year’s events were not appropriate candidates for the test, said Taylor. Instead the hospital will host two free Saturday morning fairs this summer specifically dedicated to the prevention and treatment of osteoporosis (July 21 in Highlands and Aug. 4 in Cashiers). Osteoporosis screening will be offered at those events and also at the Healthy Living Fair, scheduled for June 9 at the hospital.

In the way of new offerings this year, hospital personnel will be giving free pneumonia vaccinations to participants 65 and old who have not received the vaccine in the last five years, or others who suffer from chronic diseases. The vaccinations must be pre-scheduled at the time of registration.

Additional information booths, such as one offering suggestions of disaster home preparedness, are planned as well. And participants in the Highlands events will be able to tour the Healing Touch Massage suites and receive an abbreviated table massage free (as scheduling permits).

Pre-registration is required for all screenings. People can sign up by calling the hospital at 526-1434, or by completing the registration form on line at www.highlands-cashiers-hospital.org.

Those registering on line will receive a confirmation email. Appointment times will be assigned as part of the registration process to help reduce lines and waiting times. As in the past, those participating in screenings are asked not to eat or drink anything but water after midnight the night before.

Confidential results of screening tests will be reviewed by the participant’s own family physician (or another local physician if no family doctor is specified) before being mailed out.

Hurricane Creek coming to ITC April 14

The original Sadie Hawkins Day was a stroke of creative genius of cartoonist Al Capp. Previous to the 1960s and the women's liberation movement, asking a man out was considered bad form. On November 17, 1937, Al Capp changed all that by creating a day when women were encouraged to pursue men. It was not Mr. Capp's intention to have a day set aside like Thanksgiving or Mother's Day, but for over 30 years Sadie had her day on November 17, and so did millions of women all over America.

In keeping with Al's wishes the Instant Theatre Company is bringing back that glorious tradition on Saturday, April 14 by presenting Hurricane Creek, the local Kings of Rhythm, Blues and Rock and Roll. Gals now is the time to get that special someone to dance with you. If you catch them, they have to go. That's the rule.

The power of Hurricane Creek and the most magical dance hall in Highlands, The Studio on Main, 310 Main Street Oak Square, downtown Highlands, will provide you everything (including complimentary beer and wine) you need to have that perfect evening. It is suggested that you ask your date and make your reservations early by calling the ITC box office at 342-9197. One can always visit the ITC website at: InstantTheatre.org, and get on the email list so you don't miss one chance for a grand time.

the military among liberals? Perhaps it is because the idea of voluntarily joining an organization that will strip away your individuality and right to think for yourself seems abhorrent. Perhaps it is because liberals think war should be obsolete and can’t imagine willingly signing up to be a soldier.

Or maybe it’s the nature of the wars we’ve been fighting in the last few decades. As one soldier said in “Gunner Palace,” “I was trained to defend my country. I don’t see how fighting in Iraq is defending my country.” Or as Swofford said, “we’re here to protect the profits of the Bushes and Cheneys and the House of Saud.”

You’re a hero to fight and die for freedom, but a sap to fight and die for someone else’s profits.

de keep the news media and the public better informed about Highlands-Cashiers Hospital, we are providing you with a summary of the more significant actions and discussion items coming before the hospital’s board of directors at their most recent meeting (Thursday, March 22).

The board began its March meeting by listening to an educational minute presented by Information Technology Manager Kris Keen on the hospital computer system and the precautions that are routinely taken to make sure that all data is safeguarded. He explained the multiple backup systems used to make sure vital data can be recovered in the event of a catastrophic system failure.

The Finance Committee approved the purchase of a new cardiac telemetry monitoring system. The new equipment will replace the hospital’s existing monitoring system which was due for replacement. It is expected to be installed and operational by June.

While the hospital again showed a loss during the month of February, the amount of the shortfall was much better than had been budgeted. For the year to date, the hospital’s finances are very close to what was projected under the “turnaround” plan approved last fall.

Vice Chairman Don Mullen reported on behalf of the Governance Committee, reminding board members that a day-long planning session has been scheduled for May 17 at The Mountain Camp and Conference Center in Highlands. A large portion of that event will be devoted to meeting with an outside strategic planning consultant. Nathan Kaufman of Kaufman Strategic Advisors, LLC., of San Diego, CA, has been hired to help develop a new strategic plan for the hospital. Kaufman is a nationally-known expert in planning, and was recommended by James Orlikoff, the governance consultant who helped the hospital restructure its board last fall.

In other leadership areas, Mullen said an orientation session is being planned for new board members. The hospital also plans to review its committee structure to eliminate duplicate duties and make the committee process more efficient.

The board approved the recommendation of the Medical Staff to credential several current physicians and to grant privileges to three new physicians. New ER medical director and physician Tony Fisher, MD, was formally granted privileges (he had been working under temporary privileges), and two other new physicians who will be filling in from time to time in the hospital’s ER were also credentialed. Craig Moore, MD and John Canon, MD are both board certified and have extensive ER experience.

In his administrative report, President and CEO Ken Shull informed the board that a new internal medicine physician who has practiced for the past eight years in the Northeast has signed a formal letter of intent to relocate to Highlands this summer. With that addition to the medical community, there should be sufficient number of primary care physicians to serve the area, based on accepted physician to population ratios. Recruiting continues for a general surgeon, an urologist, and a gastroenterologist, he said.

Shull also informed board members that the new administrator of the Fidelia Eckerd Living Center, Shawna Mellott, will begin her duties on Monday (March 26).
