RiverWalk gets a ‘yes’ and a ‘no’

For the first time in a long time, a developer’s attempt to save trees failed to win a variance from the Town Board.

At the May 2 Town Board meeting, commissioners heard from RiverWalk’s attorney, Billy Clarke, who requested a 50-foot setback variance from Heatherwood Lane for one home site rather than the required 100-foot setback.

“The way the project is laid out now, there are three houses that meet the 100-foot setback, but one would require moving a lot of trees,” said Clarke. “If we could get a 50-foot setback variance, we could save about 17 trees with diameters of 12-inches to 26-inches.”

For a variance to be granted, it must be determined that undue hardship for the property owner.

The Rec Park swimming pool needs some major repair work done before it can be used this season – a season set to begin May 26.

“The question is do we want to spend this much money on an old pool,” asked Commissioner Amy Patterson.

The pool was built in 1976 as a Centennial Project.

After hearing the scope of the project, commissioners reluctantly agreed to spend the $47,000 needed to fix it.

The Rec Park swimming pool will get a face-lift.

McGavran utility pole proposal on hold

McGavran Engineering’s proposal to perform a pole attachment and general system review of Highlands’ pole plant resulted in mixed reviews.

At Tuesday morning’s Public Works Committee meeting, members heard that McGavran would have to redo 80 percent of what town employees have already done but at Wednesday night’s Town Board meeting, they heard something else.

“I agree we need better data, but it’s something we can do ourselves,” said Commissioner Hank Ross, who was unable to attend the Public Works Committee meeting. “I’d rather give the job to Lamar and his staff to complete. They would have had 50 percent of it done by now but we stopped them because of the McGavran proposal. I’ve seen what’s in the computer system and the lion’s share of what we need is there. I would trust them before I would trust McGavran.”

At Tuesday’s meeting, the committee heard that what the town had done up until now was

Highlands FD wants to hire help

At a recent Town Board meeting, the board accepted the High-lands Fire & Rescue Department’s budget request for $331,386 but questioned its request for hired help.

For several years, Bob Houston, past chief of the Highlands Fire & Rescue Department who retired from the mainstream workforce some years ago, has been a paid, part-time administrative assistant at the department.

But with fire and rescue calls increasing, volunteer members decreasing and the likelihood that Houston may retire from his part-time position in the near future, the department has requested two, part-time, paid positions for 24 hours per week each.

Commissioners asked who else in the county has fire & rescue department employees.

There are 11 fire departments in Macon County and seven of them have paid employees.

The Franklin Fire Department has two full-time employees; Clarks Chapel, Otto, Cullasaja Gorge, Nantahala and West Madison each have one full-time employee and Highlands has one part-time employee. The other four departments are strictly volunteer.

Of the county’s 11 fire departments, Franklin has the highest number of calls. Highlands has the second highest number of calls.

In 2006, Highlands responded to 96 calls, the Franklin Fire Department responded to 185 calls.
Dear Editor,

Looking out my window this morning at what was yesterday a beautiful blossom-filled Japanese Magnolia, I wish plants had foresight. March comes to Highlands with deceptively warm spring-like days and tricks our plants into going into full bloom. Inevitably winter returns with a vengeance and turns our spring blooms into brown, mushy limb attachments. It is sad, but that is nature. Most trees and plants, with the exception of rhododendron and laurel, obviously do not have the intelligence to foresee this yearly phenomenon.

We humans have learned to expect this, so don’t plant until Memorial Day at the earliest.

Some things, though, we have not learned. For instance, when a developer comes to the town and asks to convert an old growth forest or shady green space into a housing subdivision, we go along with it. After all, we are promised jobs, tax revenue, and business. The plats offered to the planning board are covered with what looks to be trees and green grass all around. Well, it looks very appealing. Every time though, every single time the green space is hauled away in enormous truck loads, taking soil that accumulated over hundreds of years. This decomposed matter constitutes the richest of dirt. One of the reasons our native trees and plants thrive here is the wonderful habitat they live in. However, part of the development plan includes uprooting and dragging our hardy plants to the dump. What is left is a level building space which has often been scraped to the rock, which then needs to be dynamited to lay pipes and wires.

After the natural beauty is cut, chopped and dug, the structures take shape, then yards are “laid” on what is often known as construction soil. This soil is inferior to anything resembling real dirt. New trees and bushes are then stuck into the dirt to fund for themselves. Our native plants could survive in droughts; but the new growth often requires frequent and heavy watering. This, of course, uses more of our precious resource of water.

Unless a builder takes the trouble to build around the most enduring and beautiful of what makes Highlands the attractive place it was, we will look artificial and identical to towns in any area of the world. Our uniqueness is what makes this mountain town attractive to travelers and homeowners. I worry. I worry that the place we came to live will no longer be special. The traffic and the pavement will heat us to a south Georgia summer temperature and we will all be exiled to our air-conditioned dens.

Maybe if we work on keeping the plants and trees where they have been growing all these years and call a halt to our love affair with pavement, we can salvage a little bit of this mountain retreat.

I have finally gained a bit of foresight. The process of selling developments to the town is always the same, offering the same arguments, attractive plat and promises of prosperity to everyone.

Is this really happening? Let’s just think ahead.

Use your right to vote

Dear Editor,

How long will it be before you are not allowed to drive your car to Franklin or Dillard on Monday or Friday so the roads will be free for tourists to get in and out of Highlands?

How about your clothes? How long will it be before you are told what to wear and what color it must be? What about “your property?”

How long will it be before you are told what color to paint and what your building and landscape must be or until you are forced from your property so illegal immigrants will have a home? There is just no end to doing what would be for the “greater good of the people”

Does all of this sound insane? How many of you would have thought 40 years ago or even 20 years ago that a group of power-hungry individuals would want to control your property and then actually control it? How many of you would have believed that public prayer would be attacked and prayer forbidden in our schools? How many thought putting a man on the moon was just a joke? How many of you thought you would never see what went on in the White House when Bill Clinton was president? Who could have ever imagined that our troops would not be supported no matter how unpopular a war might be? How many of you thought our government would never tax us off of our property?

The handwriting is on the wall! The upcoming elections are a make or break situation for our town, county, state and country! I urge you to start reviewing the candidates as soon as they file and vote for those who you believe will give us back our rights and protect those rights for future generations!

Property transaction explained

Dear Editor,

My intention 3 1/2 years ago was to purchase the 19 acres on the Cashiers Road and develop it similar to Highlands Point and with similar restrictive covenants. In meeting with the previous owners on multiple occasions during the two years the word “restrictions” were never mentioned or referred. If the seller wanted restrictions on the land as a whole, then they should have placed those restrictions prior to placing the property on the market.

Due to DOT, EPA, US Army Corps of Engineers and the Division of Water Quality and Macon County Erosion Control restrictions and requirements, plus my “hands-on” supervision of the construction of Rockcliff, the spec home at Highlands Point, I did not have the energy nor desire to complete the development.

Even though called Hemlock Cove and later Old Hemlock Cove, the name nor lot plats were never finalized nor recorded, nor were roads and utilities completed.

In late 2005, I decided to place the property on the market as a whole, like it was when purchased two years prior.

In mid 2006, I was presented an offer which I later accepted. Prior to doing I was told that the purchaser was considering building a 10-story condominium which I was against but about which I had no control or input. However, as a builder after seeing a rendering, I was a bit less concerned about the project.

The architect was using multi-angles – not a plain square box – and the use of timber frame and stone gave it a lodge appearance. It encumbered less than one acre out of the 19+ acres, less than 20 trees would have been destroyed, with the remaining to be left natural with walking paths and a small pond.

Fire protection would have been built in, eliminating the need for fire ladders to reach the top floor. This is now required in any new mid- and high-rise. Though I was not excited about Highlands having a tall building, I appreciated the fact that a lot less land would be disturbed allowing Henry Wright’s rare plants to continue growing.

Town homes and condos are needed as many of us are too old and simply tired of maintaining our large homes.

One good thing that took place among all the unpleasantness is some zoning in Macon County and Highlands. Zoning was needed long ago to protect our neighbors from building RV parks, metal sheds, asphalt plants, storage units and many other structures that would make our little paradise a nightmare. These things belong in a commercial area of their own, not next to our homes.

My life has been changed forever over negligence and greed of others.

Do you remember that old adage, "Keep in touch with yourself?" Well, I'm doing just that. I had a psychology professor during college that would start each class with that saying. Eventually he introduced me to the inner workings of id and the saying took on more meaning.

He gave the class strong answers to a lot of material usually found in the gray area. He took a stand, not necessarily always right, but no one could prove him wrong and his views on psychology were always positive. It was fun to go to class. Unlike math, psychology can be fuzzy but there was nothing fuzzy about this guy. He was high on life and it reflected in his teachings. The fact I still remember his classes a half century later tells it all.

"You can't love others unless you first love yourself" was also one of his favorite lines. "When you wake in the morning, kiss both arms many times and tell yourself how much you're in love with yourself" he would continue. "Then take that love of self and project it to everyone you come in contact with. Love is subliminally transmittable."

He believed the reason there was so much unhappiness in the world was that people do not know or have not become content with their being. Id is that tiny section of your "you" that defines who and what you are: your ego, your super-ego. It is the thing that separates you from the rest of humanity. You can't change your id but you can change how you use it. You could call it your soul if you're so inclined.

Because police work affords one a front row seat to life and because life is sometimes very ugly, an officer must find something in his "id" to help him cope with what he is subjected to during the course of his career. Because my "id" affords me a sense of humor and a superior attitude, police work was not only easy for me, but enjoyable and fun. I was successful as an undercover narcotics officer for so many years because I was a good actor. Actors lie. The better I lied, the more dealers went to the slammer. And when things became real gruesome or intolerable, I laughed it off. What a great set of escape mechanisms.

Also, the term "humble" is not stored anywhere in my id. I envy people who have that trait. Well, this is who I am and who I am not. How about you?

P.S. – Don't forget to kiss your arms and keep in touch with yourself tomorrow morning!
American’s fascination with guns

Gun control in America is a hot topic. Had I been unaware of it before, I would know now. Some columns do evoke a response. The fact is that I was well aware and I must admit harbor some bias in the matter. While I lived in Houston, I saw too many kids killed while playing with weapons intended for family protection. We lost a guy who had been shot with a .38 in a case of road rage. I don’t understand America’s fascination with guns

One of the nicest things about Highlands Cove is that you don’t have to live here to enjoy all that goes with it. Our many amenities are open to the public, pay as you use. There are 18 holes of spectacular golf where the views are nothing short of inspiring. A clubhouse with a fully stocked golf pro shop. A practice facility that rivals any in the area. And a PGA professional staff. Discerning diners will take delight in the carefully crafted cuisine that flows from Peregrine at the Cove. Located in the clubhouse, the atmosphere is relaxed and casually elegant. The menu is classic continental American and entirely handmade. Our chefs are passionate about serving up an excellent dining experience. And the full-service bar will quench any thirst.

Great golf. Fabulous food. Excellent service. Enjoy Highlands Cove today. We’re located six miles east of Highlands on Highway 64. The course is open daily. Call 828-526-4185 for tee time. This massive accumulation of cash has been accomplished because, during this period, the property tax rate has been higher than necessary.

The Commission is contemplating keeping the rate on par with last year’s which will doubtless add to the already extremely high level of cash.

What will stop this upward spiral of your cash in the County’s bank account ???

Only YOU letting your Commissioners know that enough is enough.

Call the Commissioners and let them know that a property tax rate greater than 25 mils would constitute a TAX INCREASE and is unacceptable. Brave New World - Part 2
The Yellow Roads of Texas (OK, MO, etc.)

Last week we learned of the SPP, the Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America, the TTC, Trans Texas Corridor, the NAU, North American Union. This week we'll explore the potential fallout of this grand scheme.

First, have you noticed when a program is named by any level of government, to understand what the program involves, you need to reverse what the name seems to say, and then you have a good starting point. So, what does SPP mean for the U.S.?

Remember, the SPP represents the importation of Chinese products in closed containers carried by Chinese cargo ships, off-loaded at Mexican ports, shipped by Mexican transports, truck and rail, deposited in a Smart Port terminal in Kansas City. Inspected (or not) by Mexican agents, and distributed throughout the U.S. and Canada.

First, consider the “security” part. Plunging, once again into the land of myth-ology, we recall the misfortune of the Trojans when, after a decade of fruitless siege, the Greeks hollowed out a huge wooden horse, filled it with warriors and rolled it into Troy. Thinking they had outlasted the Greeks, the Trojans got drunk, the Greeks jumped out, and the rest, as they say, is history, albeit of a mythical nature. Wouldn’t a cargo container make just a great modern day “Trojan Horse”? Sounds like an open-border policy and then some.

Second, the “prosperity” part. As I write this, the Dow is setting new records. Corporate U.S. is booming. Employment is at “full employment levels,” Mexicans are pouring over the border, seeking a piece of our prosperity. As for Canada, things seem to be moving right along. We buy huge amounts of oil from both Mexico and Canada, so their governments have plenty of petrobucks to help their people if they choose to. But we are the 800-pound elephant in the room, so whose prosperity will be enhanced by this trilateral agreement? Tain’t ours.

Third, the “partnership” part. Well, if you call chucking our sovereignty and being governed, at least in part, by a socialist and a dictator, a desirable environment for your progeny to live in, you’ll be happy with the new deal.

Border security problem solved: no borders. Currency exchange calculations a bother? Forget it, the “amero” will spend in Chihuahua, Chicago and Calgary. Talking about pounding square pegs in round holes, making this thing palatable is going to take a whole lot of spinning. If the Euros can do it, I suppose we can too.

In December, Georgia Sen. Nancy Schaefer attended a meeting of the Eagle Forum in Washington, during which she was briefed on SPP and NAU. She shared what she had learned with Georgia’s U.S. Senators Saxby Chambliss and Johnny Isakson. They claimed total ignorance of the whole sordid affair. This plan was 18 months old and evidently no one outside the Executive Branch and the Texas Dept. of Transportation was aware of the giant giveaway already in progress. You see, since the preparations were being done by Texas and foreign business interests, Congress didn’t need to know anything about it, and they didn’t.

The Kilo decision allowing the taking of private property for business interests cleared the way for the massive exercise of the “eminent domain” provision necessary to get this show on the road. That decision didn’t seem to make sense then but it does now. Only after President Bush’s attempt to direct the management of U.S. ports to mid-east operators brought a firestorm of protest did he seemingly drop the idea of globalizing our assets.

Nice try, but Mexican ports will just have to do.

The SPP had its genesis on March 23, 2005 in Waco, TX when Bush, then President of Mexico Vincente Fox and then Prime Minister Paul Martin of Canada met in a summit called to integrate the United States with Mexico and Canada. This formal agreement signed by these three heads-of-state was accomplished without the knowledge or approval of Congress or the American People. Why in Waco? Hint: Bush used to be Governor of TX. Lots of cover.

Now, ask yourself, if this is a good deal for U.S., why so clandestine? Bush being a politician should welcome the plaudits that would result from the story being told.

What’s pushing this deal? Just remember, when things happen that seemingly defy explanation, just keep asking why. I’ll try to explain why in a future column.
Yes, the rumors are true! I'm unemployed and entertaining offers. I'm DonLeon and that's MY opinion.

basically unusable by McGavran. But Town Engineer Lamar Nix said the town's inventory of poles and everything on them is extremely detailed.

"I don't know how it could be more complete," he said. "We're missing one layer, and that's the number of attachments per pole, but we could backtrack the 750-800 poles we've done and add that layer to the data."

He said his crew could do that part in two weeks. Then they could start on the remaining poles and include that "layer" from the start. There are 2,600 poles in the plant.

Nix said the pole plant is being logged into a computer program so that a query on a pole lists the attachments and whatever is on the pole "every nut, bolt, conductor, everything, including a photo of the pole," said Nix.

"This is the main reason we rehired Matt Shuler," said Commissioner Ross. "I think we should let him finish the job."

Tuesday's Public Works Committee meeting got off to a rough start when Ted McGavran and Ed Sullivan of McGavran Engineering Services suggested the town start from square one to assess the system.

"I'm not saying this to knock the staff; it's like this in a lot of municipal systems. But it's my perception that this is not a well-documented plant," said McGavran. "Nothing ties all the information together. All the pieces need to be in an operational format."

Since 2004, the town has been taking steps to document its pole plant starting with contracting out the job of locating and counting each pole for $10,000.

More recently, the town's GIS Technician, Matt Schuler, has been tagging and numbering each pole noting its GIS location and logging all the information into a database.

But McGavran says much more needs to be done and that it's possible his firm could use some of the information previously gathered, it would have to start over to gather the information missed for the purposes of documenting the entire electrical system and communication system simultaneously.

Besides walking and documenting the plant, McGavran Engineering would also draw up a contract which would be given to current attaches and future attaches outlining fees and agreements. The firm would also be the conduit between all attaches and the town holding attaches to the contract and forcing them to comply when necessary. McGavran said his firm's costs would be absorbed by the attaches and the town would see increased revenue, as well.

McGavran said the town isn't charging its attaches any rent - the town charges $10 a pole rather than the going rate of $10-$15 per attachment on a pole. In many cases Verizon and Northland have multiple attachments on poles.

Town Engineer Lamar Nix said one big problem the town has faced over the years is getting attaches to bring their attachments into compliance.

"We just can't make them comply and my question to you is how would you get them to comply when it's not clear whose fault it is and who's going to pay for it?" he asked.

He said the problem of attachment on town poles and compliance issues have been compounded over the years. Many times the fault lies with all three entities - the town, Verizon and Northland Cable - but the town's problem began with the building boom in the mid-80s.

"In a three- to five-year span, suddenly there were houses being built everywhere and transformers needed to put everywhere," he said. "Where there were phone and cable attachments previously, we put them out of compliance when we put on the transformers, but it had to be done and now the poles have to be changed out to fit everything."

Town Administrator Richard Betz suggested the town couldn't bill those costs to Northland and Verizon but McGavran said all three entities could shoulder the cost of pole changeouts.

In 2006-2007, the town budgeted $100,000 to change out poles. Over the past year, the town outsourced the job to Haynes Construction and 100 poles have been changed out. The town estimates up to 700 need to be changed but McGavran suspects that number is too low. Regardless, depending on available money, it could take the town five years.

Sullivan said ideally compliance and pole problems instigated by the addition of transformers should have been addressed in the 80s, but at this point, it's very likely the cost of changing out poles to accommodate the town's needs and attaches' needs could be split by the town, Verizon and Northland.

"The point is they need your poles and you have to maintain your system," said Sullivan. "They are there as a courtesy. Our job is to see that your system meets all the codes, that all violations are reported, and everyone stays in compliance," said Sullivan. "There is no timetable. You decide what you want to spend and what solution ed to 396 calls – 35 more than in 2005 – with the increase coming in the fire and related category which had a total of 263 calls – 55 more than last year.

The department traditionally has 30 volunteers but with members retiring and fewer people stepping up to fill the spots, it’s down to 26 members.

The two fire departments with the largest coverage area are Highlands and Nantahala. The Highlands Fire District includes the town of Highlands and the Highlands Township – a total of 10 inhabited square miles.

Due to its property valuations, which are double Franklin's, Highlands has the lowest fire tax rate. Franklin's 2007-2008 valuation is $1,440,612,954 and its tax rate for the upcoming year will be .031; Highlands' property valuation is $3,816,832,060 with a tax rate of .008. Highlands F&D requested a .009 rate but “too keep to a revenue neutral budget,” the MC Fire & Rescue Commission reduced it to .008. That will decrease Highlands' F&D requested budget by $35,000.

Interestingly, Franklin F&D’s rate was increased from .030 to .031 despite valuation increases there which translates to more money for its budget.

Highlands Fire District has the best municipal rating than anywhere else in the county which translates to lower home insurance rates for citizens. Frankin comes in second. Highlands’ rating is 5 on a scale

Last week I wrote about democracy and I’d like to say a little more about it this week. I suggested that a sense of national identity was a necessary condition before a country could become a democracy.

What other factors are necessary for democracy to succeed in a country?

Fareed Zakaria is the editor of Newsweek International; he also writes a regular column for Newsweek. He has developed a list of “preconditions for democracy.”

In December of 2001, he published a column called “How to Save the Arab World.” “At the start the United States must recognize its true goals. We do not seek democracy in the Middle East — at least not yet. We seek first what might be called the preconditions for democracy, or what I have called ‘constitutional liberalism’ — the rule of law, individual rights, private property, independent courts, the separation of church and state...”

I think you could add universal public education and an independent citizen army to Zakaria’s list.

Unfortunately, the people in the Bush administration don’t seem to have an understanding of these necessary elements that must be in place before a country is ready for a full-fledged democracy. Iraq is currently suffering from this misapprehension of what democracy requires, but there are many other examples.

“Rapid democratization has been attempted in many poor, ethnically divided societies in the last two decades, and the results are sobering. Democratic elections in the former Yugoslavia produced landslide victories for the hate-mongering Franjo Tudjman in Croatia and the genocidal Slobodan Milosevic in Serbia. In Rwanda in the early 1990s, democratization fomented ethnic extremism, yielding the majority-supported Hutu Power movement and the ensuing slaughter of Tutsis. In Indonesia in 1998, sudden democratization after the fall of Suharto’s 30-year dictatorship produced a wave of anti-Chinese demagoguery and confisications, leading to the devastating flight of more than $40 billion in Chinese-controlled capital.”

To continue with Zakaria’s column: “Over the last three decades there has been a remarkable pattern in the progress of political freedom around the world. Those countries that have made the transition from dictatorship to democracy with greatest success — Spain, Portugal, Chile, Taiwan, South Korea, Mexico — all traveled along a similar road.

"The regimes first liberalized the economy, not out of any desire to expand freedom but rather because they wanted to get rich. But this expansion of economic liberty had steady spillover effects. Economic reform meant the beginnings of a genuine rule of law — capitalism needs contracts — openness to the world, access to information and, perhaps most important, the development of a business class.”

South Korea didn’t become a democracy until 1987, after widespread student protests forced the military leader to agree to elections. Taiwan also transitioned from martial law to democracy in the late 1980s.

Freedom House is an independent, non-governmental organization that was initially created in 1941 by Eleanor Roosevelt and Wendell Willkie, among others, to urge the U.S. government to adopt policies supporting democracy and human rights at home and abroad. If you go to their website http://www.freedomhouse.org and click on “freedom in the world” on the left under Publications, you will see a map of the world with countries marked as free, partly free, and not free. Also you can select any country and get a detailed report that explains its ranking.

Freedom House sponsored a study called “How Freedom is Won: From Civic Struggle to Durable Democracy,” which focused on 67 countries where dictatorships have fallen since 1972. “The report’s central conclusion is that how a transition from authoritarianism occurs and the forces that drive the transition have significant impact on the success or failure of democratic reform. In large measure, the study finds that transitions generated by nonviolent civic coalitions lead to far better results for freedom than top-down transitions initiated by elites.”

At the beginning of this year, Zakaria wrote a column entitled “The Limits of Democracy” (Jan. 29): “[I]t is striking to read this year’s annual survey of ‘freedom in the world,’ released last week by Freedom House. The report points out that 2006 was a bad year for liberty, under attack from creeping authoritarianism in Venezuela and Russia,”

Junk justice produces junk law

On 2 April, 2007, the US Supreme Court issued its decision in Massachusetts v. EPA. The Court ruled 5-4, over two dissents, that the Environmental Protection Agency must regulate carbon dioxide as a pollutant in order to reduce global warming.

There are only two problems with this decision. It is based on junk science. And it is based on junk law.

First, the science. The opinion by Justice Stevens spends its opening section on a review of mostly international reports which conclude that the Earth is warming up in recent decades, and that this is due (primarily) to human activity. Only a few of those reports are honest enough in obscure footnotes to reveal that there have been at least 10 warming periods since the last glacial era. The most recent of these ended in 1,300 AD when there was a shocking lack of either cars on the road or coal-fired generating plants.

Somehow, Justice Stevens missed the point that global warming has happened before. That it has been warmer than it is now. And that this happened mostly when humans were living in caves or were non-existent. But that is not the worst error in this opinion.

On the legal side, the opinion notes that Congress has passed two statutes on global warming, asking for studies and reports, but declined to give the EPA jurisdiction to act on the subject. Finally, the EPA itself opened the subject, received 50,000 comments, held hearings, and concluded that it lacked jurisdiction.

Even if it did have jurisdiction, the EPA decided it was wise to follow the lead of Congress.

In the face of a no from Congress and a no from the EPA, the Court then orders the opposite result. In answer to the EPA’s objection that wrenching policy judgments that could alter the entire economy of the US should be made by Congress, the Court says only: “Although we have neither the expertise nor the authority to evaluate these policy judgments, it is evident they have nothing to do with whether greenhouse gas emissions contribute to climate change.” Yet in the decision itself, the Court claims both the expertise and the authority.

What do the two dissents say about this legislation from the bench?

Chief Justice Roberts’s dissent, joined by Justices Scalia, Thomas and Alito, states early on, “I would reject these challenges as non-justiciable. Such a conclusion involves no judgment on whether global warming exists, what causes it, or the extent of the problem...”

Redress of grievances of the sort at issue here is the function of Congress and the chief executive. This dissent attacks the majority for disobeying the Court’s own prior cases in order to conclude that Massachusetts even has a claim that can stand up in court, under the existing rules for damages and redress. It refers to the “Court’s slight-of-hand” in finding possible damages which are less than the margin of error in the very maps that counsel presented in evidence.

Roberts concludes that in this case the Court has transgressed “the proper and properly limited — role of the courts in a democratic society.”

Justice Scalia’s dissent, joined by the Chief Justice and the other two dissenters, addresses the merits of the case. EPA, like every other federal agency, was created to exercise its judgment in its area of assigned expertise. “EPA’s interpretation of ... its judgment is not only reasonable, it is the most natural reading of the text. The Court nowhere explains why this interpretation is incorrect.”

He also attacks the Court’s reading of the EPA statute, concluding that “Evidently, the Court defers only to those reasonable interpretations [by the EPA] that it favors.” This is the crux of the bad law in this decision. It is not the sworn purpose of the Court to reverse what Congress, or its agencies, have done, simply because the Court disagrees with the outcome from the other branches of government. Where does the Constitution give that kind of power to unelected judges, who do not answer to the public for any errors in their decisions.

This is emphasized in the final sentence of this dissent: “No matter how important the underlying policy issues at stake, this Court has no business substituting its own desired outcome for the reasoned judgment of the responsible agency.”

may result from strict compliance.
All four of the following criteria must be met for a variance to be granted: there are special circumstances or conditions affecting the property so that strict application of the ordinance would deprive the owner of the reasonable use of the land; that the variance is necessary for the preservation of the environment; the need is peculiar to the parcel and not generally characteristic of other parcels in the vicinity; and that the granting of the variance won’t be detrimental to public health and safety.

Clarke said the special circumstances are that moving the house site to save the trees and impact the environment less is reasonable; imposing the setback makes it unusual and deprives the owner of reasonable use of the land; that the request is peculiar to the parcel, and granting of the variance would not affect the public health or welfare.

“I don’t think anything is denied them by not granting this variance,” said Commissioner Amy Patterson. “The peculiar aspect of the parcel is due to the placement of the road they built. We have rules and unless the circumstances are overwhelming, I can’t see breaking the rules.”

Commissioner Herb James made a motion to deny; Commissioner Alan Marsh seconded it and the motion passed unanimously.

However the board did grant RiverWalk a road-grade variance in line with N.C. DOT’s grade on the grounds that it routinely grants such variances.

“Otherwise it’s like Anywhere, U.S.A.” he said.

The developers said shifting the house site toward the lane and out of the woods would save trees because the new site is in an open area, but the board didn’t budge.

Commissioner Herb James made a motion to deny; Commissioner Alan Marsh seconded it and the motion passed unanimously.

The board granted the variance subject to the Planning Board’s decision on May 21.

“I think it has to be done,” said Mayor Don Mullen at the May 2 Town Board meeting.

About 1 ½ weeks ago, damage to the pool was discovered. The fiber-tech layer called Marcite has pulled itself off the basin of the pool. The Marcite was applied in 1996 and Highlands weather, specifically wind, freezing and thawing, are likely the culprits in its destruction.

Sun Stuff Pools & Spas of Asheville has made similar repairs to pools at the Asheville Country Club and at the Highlands Country Club. The owner said his company can start May 21 and can be finished in a week.

“The decision to put the road there was for density reasons. It was something they did.”

Commissioner Hank Ross said he preferred the current triangular design of home sites on the parcel to a linear design situated along the lane anyway.

“The triangular design is more appealing and more in line with what we want for clustering. Otherwise it’s like Anywhere, U.S.A.” he said.

The developers said shifting the house site toward the lane and out of the woods would save trees because the new site is in an open area, but the board didn’t budge.

‘Enchanted April ‘ is May’s play

Excitement is running high for cast, director, and production team. It’s opening night for the Highlands Community Players production of “Enchanted April,” which begins at 7:30 p.m. at the Martin-Lipscomb Performing Arts Center on Chestnut Street in Highlands. The opening night audience, as usual, is invited after the performance to a reception catered by Wolfgang’s on Main.

Performances continue this weekend, Friday and Saturday, May 11 and 12, 7:30 p.m. The Sunday matinee, at 2:30 p.m., on May 13, Mother’s Day, is perfect for an outing with your mother to celebrate the day. Performances continue through next weekend, Thursday, May 17, — Sunday, May 20.

The play lives up to its name—it’s enchanting! It begins in England during a rainy winter month shortly after the end of World War I when Lotty Wilton, a London housewife, notices an “advert” offering a small castle for rent in Italy, complete with “sunshine and wisteria.” Knowing that her husband will not approve of such a venture and aware that she cannot afford the rent using her own resources, Lotty recruits three other women willing to share the expenses.

The scene shifts to Italy; the month is now April. The four women, of different ages, back-grounds and temperaments, take up residence in the charming old castle, soon encountering difficulties adjusting to each other’s personalities and habits. But amidst San Salvatore’s flowers and sunshine, spirits are refreshed; unexpected romances and friendships flourish along with the wisteria.

Several of HCP’s most accomplished actors are cast in play, as well as two newcomers. Madeleine Davis, Becky Schilling, Jody Read, Shirley Williams, Stuart Armor, and Jim Gordon are well known to HCP audiences for their excellent performances. Gina Pauratore, new to HCP but with a long list of theatrical credits from New Orleans and elsewhere, is a welcome addition; while Jim Loring, a Londoner himself, is on stage for the first time and doing a most creditable job.

Tickets for HCP are available at the HCP box office in the Performing Arts Center, between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., Monday through Saturday. Tickets for the Sunday matinees can be purchased at the box office starting at 1 p.m. before the 2:30 matinee. Tickets for adults are $15; for students, $8; and for groups of 10 or more, $12. Pay by cash or check. Call 526-8084 for reservations.

“Enchanted April” is suitable for young people, but young children will probably not find it of interest.

you want and we will make it happen.”

McGraven said with two other entities putting money into the pot, more money would be available, so the poles could be changed out faster than if the town was just relying on its own budget. But a solid contractual agreement is needed to get any of that started.

McGraven would charge $25,000 for a comprehensive documentation of the pole plant and up to $20,000 to draw up contracts for attachments which would include getting them to agree to all terms. He said he could have the plant documented in 60-90 days.

Commissioner Alan Marsh, also a member of the Public Works Committee, suggested checking McGraven Engineering’s references before moving forward but was initially in favor of the first two parts of the proposal – documentation and the contract delivery.

But in the end, the board decided to take the McGraven proposal under advisement.

Dickson to preach at Christ Anglican

The Right Reverend Alex D. Dickson, retired Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of West Tennessee, and his wife, Jane, is visiting Highlands this week. He will preach and celebrate Holy Communion at Christ Anglican Church at 11 a.m., Sunday, May 6. Worship services are at the Highlands Community Center adjacent to the baseball field. Visitors and friends are welcome!

Bishop Dickson is currently serving as Pastoral Bishop for the Southeastern Convocation of the Anglican Communion Network of Dioceses and Parishes. Highly active in the national Episcopal Church for many years, Bishop Dickson previously served on the Executive Council, the Standing Liturgical Communion, the Council for the Development of Ministry, the Joint Task Force for Lay Ministry, and served at 14 consecutive General Conventions from 1964 to 1997, first as a Deputy, and then as a Bishop. He also was a member of the Board of Regents of the University of the South.

Bishop Dickson served as a Founding Member and as Vice President of the American Anglican Council, as a Founding Member and member of the Steering Committee of the Irenaeus Fellowship of Bishops, and as Chairman of the Board of the North American Missionary Society. Earlier he served as an Episcopal advisor to the First Promise Movement of the Episcopal Church and was co-consecrator of Bishops Chuck Murphy and John Rodgers in Singapore in January, 2000. He currently serves as a member of the Council of Bishops of the Anglican Mission in America.

Prior to becoming the first Bishop of West Tennessee, he served as Rector and Headmaster of All Saints Episcopal Church and All Saints Episcopal School, Vicksburg, MS.

He earlier served three other churches in Mississippi. Bishop Dickson received a Bachelor of Business Administration degree from the University of Mississippi, a Master of Education degree from Mississippi College, and his Master of Divinity and Doctor of Divinity degrees from the University of the South.
Changing the default settings

Excerpts from sermon preached on April 29

Growing up I was a good boy. I was a good boy because I always did what my mama told me to do. Mama always said, "mind your p’s and q’s." And I did. I tried to mind them even though I didn’t really know what p’s and q’s were. I think p’s and q’s were things like “always clean your plate.” And I did - even if it meant secretly scooping the mashed potatoes off the plate into my napkin and stashing them into my pocket. I think minding your p’s and q’s also meant being quiet in church. And still to this day I can stand at the very spot between the holly bushes at Lebanon United Methodist Church in High Point, NC, where I got spanked by my dad for not minding that p and q. Another p and q was never talk to strangers. I tried my best to talk only to the folk I knew and with whom I was comfortable. Mama’s advice served me well. In most cases, it made good sense. You always clean your plate, the reasoning was, because there was always a little child in Cambodia or Africa who was starving. To clean your plate meant to appreciate the food that you had and not to waste. Good sense. But the guilt of not cleaning your plate even when you were fully tended to teach me the habit of overeating. Then there’s never talk to strangers. That makes sense for protection and safety. But in another light, what do you do when you are seeking to follow the example of Jesus, who was always talking to the very ones your mama said to avoid?

On my computer, when I am typing in Microsoft Word, preparing the bulletin on any given Sunday, the font we use is Arial. Every so often, I will click the mouse and the cursor to a blank line, and suddenly, without warning or notice, the font, will go to Times New Roman. It drives me nuts. Why? Well, being a geek but not a computer geek, I have been told that the reason why this happens is that Times New Roman is the default setting. That means, the computer program has been pre-set with a style of font, in this case, Times New Roman, so that if a font on a line or page is not specified, and the computer does not know what type to use, or if there is some glitch, and the computer gets confused, it will automatically revert back to its pre-existing settings - it will go back to the very first thing it was instructed to do - in my computer’s case, type in Times New Roman.

We’re much like my computer. We too have our default settings. Our default settings are the ways we were programmed and set up to believe about things.

We have default settings about how we understand God. We have default settings about how we understand and relate to other people. Most of these default settings were acquired from parents, teachers, religion, our community and world. If a default setting was “never talk to strangers”, chances are that message is still somewhere in the back of your mind when you are trying to be friendly to a newcomer. In the book of Acts, when the Holy Spirit rests upon the apostles, filling their locked room where they huddled in fear and confusion, their lives would never be the same. From that moment forward, their default settings would be challenged. God would ask them to touch sinners, to heal broken people, to reach out to those that institutional religion had cast out long ago. The Holy Spirit would challenge their default settings about race and nation and creed, asking them to go and violate their pre-set understandings of faith and life. And because the early apostles allowed the love of Jesus to challenge their default settings, the entire world was given the opportunity to be included in the family of God.

Where is God challenging your default settings? As a child, I got on a bus in grade school in Greensboro, NC, and was bussed across the city past every possible elementary school closest to my home, to Mt. Zion Elementary, a school in a crime infested neighborhood, to Mt. Zion Elementary, the city’s efforts to integrate Greensboro City Schools. Although it wasn’t explicitly said, it was obvious that the white community felt like all of this change was wrong and it was black people’s fault. At Mt. Zion I understood racism for the first time from another angle. It was okay the way we were raised to know that there were black people in the world, and that was just fine, as long as we didn’t have to live beside them, go to church with them, or go to school with them. And if we did, they went from being just a group of people you tolerated to being downright meddlesome. My mom and dad considered the idea of pulling us out of public school. But my father, a military service man, a born again Christian, believed that keeping us in that school would teach us valuable lessons of what it meant to truly be in community with people who were different from us. For my daddy, who was raised in a home in rural Tennessee where the world was so divided between black and white, where the “N” word was used to describe everyone of color, it was against his default setting. Only later, did I realize that this was really what it meant to be like Christ. Not until seminary – when I went to school, became friends with, prayed with, and cried with Anthony, a man studying to be a pastor in the African Methodist Episcopal Church, did that lesson really hit home. It was the first time in my mind and heart that color didn’t matter.

comes from a very dedicate, highly experienced and hard working Board of Trustees who want the best for our area in both health and medical care. The major changes that have been made recently are getting results. Nothing is wrong with our hospital that could not be corrected with a general surgeon on staff and this will happen soon. I hope everyone will continue to support the very experienced what it felt like to be a minority, one of about 30 percent white people. It was there I understood racism for the first time from another angle. It was okay the way we were raised to know that there were black people in the world, and that was just fine, as long as we didn’t have to live beside them, go to church with them, or go to school with them.
