Restaurant parking solutions offered

After months of discussion at Planning and Town Board meetings, it looks like changes to restaurant parking allowances is a real possibility.

At the Monday, Jan., 28 Planning Board meeting, even Allan Schultz, owner of Fireside Restaurant — longtime opponent to any suggestion of changing restaurant parking allowances — was happy with the potential solution.

Presiding over his first Planning Board meeting, Town Planner Joe Cooley presented three "shared" parking solutions with restaurants in mind, but said the scenarios could be used for any business in town.

"Shared parking is one form of parking management and it may include credits for existing public parking and sharing park-

Enforcement net widens with agreement

Citizens should no longer assume the presence of a Jackson County Sheriff's Department vehicle on the streets of Highlands pure happenstance. As of last Thursday, the Highlands Police Department and the Jackson County Sheriff's Department entered into a mutual aid agreement.

"This will bridge a gap in the collaboration of agencies," said Highlands Police Chief Bill Harrell. "We're neighbors, kissing cousins, with some of the town's limits in Jackson County."

With the two areas so close together, Harrell said law enforcement needs a strong unity and the agreement will strengthen ties with one another.

Jackson County Sheriff Jimmy Ashe said due to proximity, the communities of Highlands and

Occupancy Tax Committee finalizing report

Precisely how the county should disburse the occupancy tax collected by lodging establishments in Macon County is still up in the air.

At its second meeting Thursday, Jan. 24, members of the Occupancy Tax Study Committee were divided on its disbursement. Part of the committee is leaning toward a Travel & Tourism Authority (TTA) which could give the funds collected back to the areas from which they came with the chambers of commerce just one of the recipients; the other part would prefer everything stay as it is with the Highlands and Franklin chambers of commerce and a newly formed group representing Nantahala as the sole recipients.

County Attorney Lesley Moxley and County Manager Jack Horton were at the meeting to both advise on the legalities of the occupancy tax disbursement and to explain how other counties handle their money.

Moxley said the main prob-

Funding to include Highlands School

Toward the end of a four-hour work session Sunday, Jan. 27, Macon County Commissioners heard financial scenarios for funding upcoming capital projects – most of which had been on the failed bond referendum.

Noting there was little on the school bond referendum for Highlands, commissioners agreed to discuss funding Highlands School roof repairs, bathroom renovations and a new soccer field behind the elementary wing with the package.

"Franklin High School has football and it has a football field. Highlands School has soccer and it needs a field," said Commission Chairman Charlie Leatherman. "It will improve the school campus and offer them a place to compete at the school. It's for the kids and I will support it."

Commissioner Ronnie Beale is on the school board committee and presented the soccer field scenario to the board at the work session. However, Leatherman said protocol being what it is the school board needs to formally request the county to fund the soccer field.

Beale said it's expected to cost $250,000 and asked if the county could fund Highlands' projects now and have the county reim-

Exactly who is responsible?

Dear Editor,

On Tuesday, Dec. 11 there was a terrible accident on U.S 64 involving a tractor trailer carrying water bottles. As my husband and I were driving down to Franklin last week, we noticed that the debris from this accident was still strewn along the bank, and when I use the word debris, I don't mean the water bottles, but the actual trailer portion of the truck!

We wondered who is responsible for cleaning this mess up? It seems strange that there is a littering law and if you are caught throwing trash out of your car window you may receive a hefty fine, but if you trash your entire truck and leave it on the side of the road it just sits there indefinitely without penalty?

I hope that someone, (N.C. DOT, the trucking company, the county?) will clean this up before we embark on another tourist season. It is not the most appealing welcome to our community of natural beauty.

One final word...

Dear Editor,

As promised, this letter is my defense of the Christian faith. I intend for this to be my last response in the spirited discussion between Mr. Hancock, Ms. Brugger and myself. In my original letter I argued that for a world view to have validity it must answer four fundamental questions. These are questions of origin, meaning, morality, and destiny. I will attempt to give clear, brief answers to these age-old questions. I'm sure some things will be lost in the effort. I will borrow from multiple sources, and in the interest of space will not cite them all.

Let us begin at the beginning. The Bible tells us that God created the universe in six days approximately 6,000 years ago. Now before you dismiss this idea due to belief in an old earth, read on. I believe there is abundant evidence that supports a belief in a young earth. One example of this evidence is the receding moon. Scientists have observed that the moon is moving away from us about two inches every year. If one could reverse the process, the earth and moon would have been touching about two billion years ago. Or say the earth was five billion years old the moon would be out of sight by now. Another example is the measurable weakening of the earth's magnetic field. Ten thousand years ago the magnetic field would have been too strong to support life. There are many other evidences. Keep in mind that Christ's first miracle was making wine from water. Even though the wine was moments old, it had the appearance of age.

Why did God create the universe in the first place? I believe the Bible gives us a hint. He created the universe for His glory (Romans 11:36, Isaiah 43:7). It is by bringing glory to God that we find meaning in life. How?

Well, I borrow this thinking almost entirely from Dr. Ravi Zacharias, and I'll try to do it justice. Dr. Zacharias says that there are four things that bring meaning to life and surface at different times in life. These four are wonder in childhood, truth in adolescence, love in young adulthood, and security in old age. We all experience these things or have searched for them in their absence. For the Christian, all of these longings are satisfied in the person of Christ. Worship is the linchpin, so to speak, but what is worship? Archbishop William Temple defined it in these terms, "Worship is the submission of all of our nature to God. It is the quickening of conscience by His holiness, nourishment of mind by His truth, purifying of imagination by His beauty, opening of the heart to His love, and submission of will to His purpose. All this gathered up in adoration is the greatest expression of which we are capable."

Unlike most other major world religions, the Christian's worship is not confined to a building. The Christian worships when he or she does anything that reflects the nature of Christ. The Christian doesn't have to go to the temple because we take the temple with us. So, when Ms. Brugger suggests that the Christian finds meaning in "a personal relationship with God/Jesus" she is half right. While the relationship is essential, it isn't the end. We worship because of the relationship, and through worship we bring glory to God, thus fulfilling our original purpose and find meaning in the process.

Morality. The Bible teaches us that evil entered the world and humanity in the Garden of Eden. This is when Adam and Eve disobeyed God's one and only prohibition and left all of mankind with a sin nature. This is what is known as the fall. God then set up His law in an effort to keep us from creating complete chaos. God's law is absolute and His standard is perfection. But how is it that imperfect beings reach this goal of perfection? The answer is, we can't. However, the Christian has an advocate in Christ. So what of Ms. Brugger's question of people born before Christ who through "no fault of their

A convoluted mind

I had just finished telling a friend how I felt that every single presidential candidate was a crook and couldn't be trusted when he blurted out, "You were a cop for way too long." Guilty as charged! Police work has twisted my thinking beyond the norm. I see evil when most folks don't. I'm not talking about your everyday run of the mill just being cynical stuff because most cops consider that normal. I'm talking about thinking of things far, far outside the box; the "not normal" stuff. Police work has left me with a convoluted mind but there are worse "sick puppies" out there than me.

This is a good thing because convoluted thinkers can easily spot the more dangerous types, like politicians. They are a scary bunch. Actually I'm talking about the real "two clicks off" people that can't easily be spotted. Being the way I am, I can spot them after a short talk. If you're wondering how you might fit into the convoluted thinker spectrum, allow me to propose several hypotheses and see how well you do.

Consider these statements. While in flight, the pilot turns on the "fasten seat belt" sign and the airplane experiences turbulence. Therefore, turning on the seat belt sign causes turbulence. Here's another one exactly like it. Humans pollute the planet and the planet begins to warm. Therefore, polluting the planet causes warming. If you answered "true" to both statements then I congratulate you and welcome you aboard.

Oh, no! You say you're more confused than ever about your status. Allow me to continue. Consider this. A presidential candidate, exhausted, stressed and losing in the polls, breaks down and cries on national television. Immediately her poll numbers skyrocket and she wins the election. Conclusion: The American people want a president who breaks down and cries on national television when he or she is tired, losing the fight and under stress. Did that clear things up for you? Oh, by the way, based on convoluted thinking, Jimmy (The devil made him do it.) Swagger could cry his way right into the White House with a landslide victory.

Here's a short list of convoluted thoughts to help you further decide where you stand: If everyone on the planet smoked marijuana, no one would get on an airplane. If going to heaven is so wonderful, how come everyone dreads dying? If there are virgins in heaven, will any of them be from Miami? Will they be fat and ugly? If everyone from New York City moved to Highlands, would Franklin look like a much better place to live?

The elevation of Tupelo, Mississippi, is 486 feet. That has nothing to do with convoluted thinking. I just thought I'd mention that just in case any Highlanders are sick of the growth and are thinking of moving. Hmmm, on second thought, that might be convoluted.

How about this one? The same people who complain about Highlands' growth are the same people who want to bring more people to Highlands so they can make a decent wage and not have to move. Conclusion: Those people don't really want anyone coming here but wish they would mail Highlanders the money and stay out.

Here's another. Highlanders who are most vocal about throwing all the illegal immigrants out of here are the same people who hire them the most. And finally, Highlanders want their property values to rise but want property taxes to go down. Now that's convoluted thinking. Are you catching on? Isn't it fun? If none of this makes any sense, be very afraid because you might be normal.

Since I am no longer trying to save the world from anything, including itself, and I am not interested in making things better for the next generation, my grandchildren and all that silly stuff, I sit back and watch the world become more and more convoluted everyday.

It reminds me of the kingdom of people who drank from the poisoned well and became insane. They were all crazy but it didn't matter because everyone was equally as nuts. Those who didn't drink from the well were considered crazy. Conclusion: People who are normal and not convoluted are all crazy and should not be trusted. That's another reason to stay as twisted as you can.

PS - I drank from the well a long time ago and therefore, I never trust a man who doesn't drink.

Beware of libelous emails

I recently received an e-mail entitled, "Who is Barack Obama?". What I read was a vicious and false attack on the Illinois senator, a repetition of previously discredited charges.

The correspondence claimed that Sen. Obama was a Muslim who had been schooled by radical Islamists. Among other claims was one that Obama had used the Koran instead of the Bible when he took the Oath of Office in the U.S. Senate, and that he refuses to pledge allegiance to the American flag. There was a reference to his Mom's atheism.

I've decided against reproducing the letter in this column, but I'll forward it to any reader who requests it, although I suspect anyone with e-mail has already found his inbox soiled by it. The letter concludes, "Muslims have told us that they plan to destroy the U.S. from the inside out, what better way than at the highest level — the president of the United States, one of their own!!!!"

I hope I got the correct number of exclamation points. That's pretty audacious, but even more brazen is the challenge to readers to check the authenticity of the claims with www.snopes.com, a website which researches the validity of urban legends, and which has dismissed many a myth. If a recipient of the letter accepts the challenge and links to snopes.com he finds exactly the opposite, that the site identifies the charges as false, even reproducing the letter and rejecting each of its claims.

We've been conditioned to accept the validity of the written word, and sometimes forget that anybody can post anything on the web. It is, after all, the written word, and as such, is cloaked in a mantle of authenticity. When John Kennedy ran for president in 1960, it was more difficult to smear his name than it is to slander Obama's in 2008. A person had to stand on a street corner handing out leaflets to one person at a time. The risk of confrontation was always present. The hate monger might hand a leaflet to an Irish Catholic.

The message of hatred was just as vile as it is today, but it was more arduous and risky to disseminate than it is today. A person with a computer

Dr. Henry Salzarulo

Feedback is encouraged.
email:
hsalzarulo@aol.com

and email addresses can instantly send the letter to tens or hundreds of contacts. Each recipient can then just as easily forward it to another bunch of friends. Even with duplications and coffee breaks, a lie can theoretically reach every computer in the United States within hours. I didn't do the math. Actually I have no idea how to do the math. I'm guessing and there are variables, but you get the point. Hate literature is much easier, less costly and less dangerous to disseminate than it once was.

Even TV has limits on the political advertising it accepts, and ads are expensive. Emails are instant and free. They can be sent anonymously if one chooses, or if he fears a cyber haymaker in response. I've had some cyber blows in response to things I've written in this column, but none has put me on the canvas. While they don't hurt as much as the real thing, they are not painless, either. I'm proud to say that the shots I've taken are not from people who think I lied, but from readers who don't like what I said or how I said it. My only hope is that they keep reading, and swing when they see fit.

Freedom of Speech is not absolute. Slander and libel laws exist to prevent character assassination.

Unfortunately, the Internet is a tough beat to police. Barack Obama's dark skin and Muslim name make him a ready target for bigots, just as John Kennedy's Catholicism exposed him to similar abuse nearly half a century earlier. The difference is that the venom can be spread so much faster today.

In the Time of Kings

Are you depressed about world affairs? Presidential race getting you down? Worried about the economy?

I read a new book that lifted my spirits, and it might lift yours: King Kaiser Tsar, by Catrine Clay [940.3C]. This is a story of the three men who ruled England, Germany and Russia in the years before World War I. How could this be uplifting you might ask? After a reminder that less than a hundred years ago a great part of the world was ruled by absolute monarchs, I felt much better about today's world.

Ms. Clay has worked for the BBC for over 20 years, directing and producing award-winning documentaries. Her book is based on a documentary of the same title and draws on previously unpublished letters and diaries made public by Queen Elizabeth, creating intimate portraits of these men and their families. The three rulers were cousins, and the book documents how family dysfunction interacted with world events to lead to WWI.

Katie Brugger
k-brugger@hotmail.com

Great Powers by Paul Kennedy, I have had a different understanding of WWI, and this new book only confirmed this point of view.

Over the last 500 years, a succession of European nations took their turn as the dominant power: Spain, Portugal, the Netherlands, France, Austria, and finally in the 1800s Great Britain. The great wars through history — the Thirty Years War, the Hundred Years War — have been between the dominant world power and the ascending power. At the end of the 19th century it was time for Germany to succeed Britain (as we now forecast China or India to succeed us). Germany had just become a nation in the latter half of the 1800s. In the mid-1500s there were more than 2,000 tiny fiefdoms, kingdoms, and city-states in the area which became Germany. For various reasons it lagged behind other nations in the development of the nation-state. Culturally, Germany was on fire by the 1800s. Germany excelled in universities, science, and engineering, making it a powerhouse in the new industrial revolution.

many of the problems associated with hereditary absolute monarchies. Perhaps the most obvious problem is the first born son of the king is the heir, no matter what. Kaiser Wilhelm was a breech birth, born with an arm wrapped around his neck that never grew properly — withered and useless his entire life—and severe inner ear problems that affected his physical balance and possibly his mental balance. King George's older brother was practically a moron; luckily for England (and the rest of us) he died before he had a chance to be King.

A second problem is that the pool of potential mates was relatively small, as there was a high standard for purity of royal blood — the Germans had a word it: ebenbürtig. The royal families had much more in common with one another than with the people of their countries. The men were nominally from their country (the current English royal family is mostly German, they changed their name to Windsor after WWI to hide that fact) but the women usually came from outside so they were not of the same nationality as the people they ruled. There was often a conflict of interest: "Alix (wife of the Tsar), half-German, half-English, was writing to her Danish mother-in-law as though they were both Russian. This dual and triple identity, normal for European royals, was manageable in peacetime but deadly in times of war."

World War I is one of those historical events that are difficult for most of us to comprehend: we are taught that it began with the murder of an Austro-Hungarian Archduke by a Serbian. How could that lead to the trenches of France? I love what Bob Dylan wrote in his song With God on our Side: "The First World War, boys, it closed out its fate/the reason for fighting, I never got straight/but I learned to accept it, accept it with pride/for you don't count the dead/with God on your side."

Ever since I read Rise and Fall of the

the end of the 19th century it was time for Germany to succeed Britain (as we now forecast China or India to succeed us).

Germany had just become a nation in the latter half of the 1800s. In the mid-1500s there were more than 2,000 tiny fiefdoms, kingdoms, and city-states in the area which became Germany. For various reasons it lagged behind other nations in the development of the nation-state.

Culturally, Germany was on fire by the 1800s. Germany excelled in universities, science, and engineering, making it a powerhouse in the new industrial revolution.

But Britain, like most great powers, was reluctant to give up the top spot. An example from King Kaiser Tsar: In 1904, France and England signed the Entente Cordiale, which, among other things, divided North Africa between France and England. Germany, with rapidly growing trade interests in North Africa, was left out. When the Germans protested and demanded unrestricted access to Morocco, an international conference was called to "decide" the matter, which allowed for foreign commerce in Morocco but only under France's supervision. Ms. Clay writes: "It was clear to everyone that the Moroccan crisis was not really about Morocco, but about alliances between the Great Powers. Germany's construction of a massive battle fleet under Tirpitz was seen for what it was, a threat to the balance of power, if necessary by means of war, and England, Russia, and France were not prepared to give Germany a place at the table."

Of course Germany was controlled by the Prussians who thought they were superior to all other races (the forerunner of Nazi Aryanism) and whose militarism was reflected in the Kaiser's complete worship of all things uniformed. But WWI was not a war of German aggression against innocent victims. It was a ruthless battle for world domination — the Otto-

License?

We Don't Need No Steenkin' License!

There are a few scenes in classic movies that are so effective that the dialogue has passed into the common language. One of those is in The Treasure of Sierra Madre. Mexican bandits have confronted American gold miners, including Humphrey Bogart. The bandits claim to be federal police.

Challenged to produce their badges, one gives the memorable reply, "Badges? We don't need no steenkin' badges." And then they begin shooting.

Well a situation began in New Jersey, then played out in the Court of Appeals of Maryland, which justifies the modified use of that line. It also should concern all citizens of the US who care about where this nation is headed.

Ramiro Silba Alavez, a citizen of Mexico, got a driver's license in New Jersey by presenting false documents which represented that he was a US citizen and a resident of New Jersey. NJ required that anyone seeking a driver's license there show proof of citizenship. Somehow, NJ got word of his false documents and "withdrew" his license after it expired in 1991.

Senor Alavez, being both cheeky and resourceful, then moved to Maryland, which doesn't bother to check whether a license applicant has a legal right to be there. Alavez applied for a Maryland license. That was denied because Maryland does prohibit granting a license to anyone whose license has been suspended in another state.

Alavez doesn't sound like a man of means, but with the help of support groups for illegal immigrants, he took his case to the highest court in Maryland, the Court of Appeals. The majority there just ruled on 9 January that the DMV was correct to deny a license to Alavez, not because he was an illegal immigrant, but because his license was suspended in another state.

It was six years ago that I was invited to meet with a group of state legislators from around the country, on the subject of driver's licenses. Keep in mind the reciprocal rule, that anyone who has a license from one state could

 michiemead@aol.com
 John_Armor@yale.edu

go to any other and get a new license there.

That made the entire process of issuing drivers licenses as weak as the laws of the weakest state. That's why all of the 9/11 hijackers were carrying multiple licenses from many states. I told those state legislators that either they would work with each other to establish minimum standards for proof of citizenship, or Congress would set a standard and compel the states to follow.

The states did not act together. Congress has forced the issue, and the Homeland Security Department has just issued the final regulations for all states to adopt those minimum standards.

What is the importance of all this?

Our northern and southern borders are still as porous as Swiss cheese. We don't have a big problem with Canadians sneaking across the border because their standard of living is about the same as ours. But we have a huge problem with Mexicans because the US has become the ad hoc welfare department for Mexico (and a hundred other nations).

This presents a related set of problems: higher costs for education, welfare, hospitals, police departments, prisons, plus the dangers from drug dealers and terrorists, plus the problem of foreigners voting in American elections. All of these problems are made worse by the issuance of driver's licenses to illegal aliens.

These points are all obvious, but not obvious enough for the Governor of New York, the California legislature (and several others), plus some pathetic positions on this issue taken by certain Democrat and Republican candidates for President.

It ought to be obvious that American elections, hospitals, schools and the like are paid for by American taxpayers for the benefit of American citizens. The idea that any aliens who sneak across the border are entitled to the same things simply because they've got a bad deal in whatever third-world nation they come from, will bankrupt local, state and national governments in the US, as well as challenge the integrity

Summary of combined January meeting of the Hospital board of directors

To keep the news media and the public better informed about Highlands-Cashiers Hospital, we are providing you with a summary of the more significant actions and discussion items coming before the hospital's board of directors at its most recent meeting on Thursday, Jan. 24, 2008.

• Board Chairman Bud Smith began the meeting by remembering several late members of the hospital family who have died recently. Smith called the late John Bullock, who was a member of the Foundation board and also the hospital's Physician Recruiting Committee, a great friend and supporter of the hospital. The retired drug company executive died unexpectedly Dec. 2, 2007. Smith also remembered long-time Foundation board member Kenneth W. Cooper DMD, who died Jan. 2, 2008, as a result of fall at his home in Sarasota, Fl. Smith called Cooper, who was also a volunteer in the mail room at the hospital for many years, a strong influence on the Foundation board for many years. He said the two men would be greatly missed at the hospital. He also expressed condolences to the family of Hospital board member Tom Sawyer on the death of his wife Vicki, who had lost a valiant battle with cancer just prior to Christmas.

• Finance Committee Chairman Julian Franklin reported that the committee had held a lengthy and productive meeting that week, closely reviewing several key cost centers. He said the committee will continue to monitor those areas. Franklin also said the Finance Committee had approved the purchase of new fluoroscopy equipment for the hospital's radiology department. The hospital's existing equipment, which has been in place since the new hospital opened in 1993, needs to be replaced. He said the committee also approved the pro forma for a new sleep study program to be operated

Teams pounding out tough year

Highlands Varsity Girls scored their first win of the season Thursday, Jan. 24 against Blue Ridge beating them 52-38

They came on strong during the first quarter, slowed down to Blue Ridge's second quarter but came back after half-time scoring 20 points to Blue Ridge's 12.

Top scorer was Brie Schmitt with 19 followed by Taylor Buras with 14, Courtney Rogers with 6, Bobbi Jo Talley with 4, Sarah Power with 2 and Jessica Gagne with 1.

"We got everything to work for us in the game," said Coach Brett Lamb. "Our offense moved the ball well and we made great shots, our defense moved and had 15 steals and 30 rebounds. It was a good motivation!"

Friday's game against Cherokee didn't fare as well, but the team played hard to a bigger team losing to 44 to 65. Highlands beat them first quarter 14 to 10, tied them fourth quarter 12 to 12, but couldn't get it over Cherokee.

Marlee McCall and Brie Schmitt were top scorers with 8 points, followed by Devon Potter and Sarah Power with 7, Courtney Rogers scored 5, and Taylor Buras and Bobbi Jo Talley with 4 each, and Susan Johnson with 1.

As a team the Lady Highlanders had 20 rebounds, 7 blocks and 9 assists. "We are continuing to build and grow with the fundamentals of the game and we are getting better as a team," said Coach Lamb.

The girls lost at home to Robbinsville, Monday, Jan. 28 54 to 77 which makes 1 win and 21 losses for the season, but a conference record of 1 win 2 losses.

The team had a strong fourth quarter with 21 points against Robbinsville 19, but it wasn't enough to swing the score.

Top scorer was Sarah Power with 15 points followed by Marlee McCall with 11 and Courtney Rogers with 10 points. Next up was Brie Schmitt with 8 and Taylor Buras with 6 points. Kate Marie Parks and Jessica Gagne each scored 2 points.

"We played a great game against the number 1 team in the conference," said Coach Lamb. "Robbinsville capitalized on our mistakes and made their free throw shots."

The Lady Highlanders had 18 blocks/tips and 23 rebounds.

The next home game is against Swain County on Feb. 5 at 6:30 p.m.

The boys played a tough game against Cherokee, too, Friday, Jan. 25, losing 82-70.

Top scorers were Jake Heffington with 23 points and Ezra Herz with 19 points. Andrew Billingsley and Michael Shearl each scored 10 points, Mikey Lica scored 5 and Casey Molinary scored 3 points.

Highlands lost at home to Robbinsville 41 to 75 Monday night, but at least a good part of the team got play time.

High scorer was Jake Heffington with 13 points followed by Andrew Billingsley with 6 and Ezra Herz with 5. Next up were Mikey Lica and Michael Shearl with 4 each; Michael Baty, Robbie Vanderbilt and Josh Delacruz each with 3.

Varsity Boys season record is 4 wins 17 losses. The conference record is 2 wins 1 loss.

The next home game is Feb. 5 against Swain County at 8 p.m.

A running commentary

Due to the tremendous response from my last running basketball commentary (TWO, count 'em, TWO emails - and only one was from mom) we are live from the Potts household and ready for the start of Duke and Maryland. However, due to overtime between UVA and Georgia Tech, you get extra bonus commentary. (The gift that keeps on giving).

6:45 p.m. - Georgia Tech has a 2 point lead off of a score inside by Jeremis Smith. Nevermind, Sean Singletary just tied the game with an offensive rebound. Singletary is continuing to dominate this game from all ends of the floor.

6:52 - As dominant as Singletary has been, overtime has belonged to Matt Causey. Causey is a basketball vagabond who transferred to GT from North Georgia College. His former coach in high school, Seth Vining, delivered a butt kicking of epic proportions to my basketball team this weekend...so I feel a special connection with Causey. (That was sarcasm).

6:56 - Apparently, Duke and Maryland are tied up in College Park - I have no clue seeing as I am still watching this other game. GT ends up winning by 10 in OT. The announcers inform me that this has been the seventh OT game in the ACC this season - speaks a lot to how competitive the ACC has been thus far.

7:02 - We join Duke - MD after the 12 and under timeout and it looks like MD has been taking advantage of Duke inside and Duke is struggling on the boards as usual.

7:10 - Duke takes a 4 point lead, mainly from forcing turnovers. Henderson just picks up a horrible offensive foul call as Coach K mildly disagrees with the official. Something tells me that Coach K and Gary Williams will set a world record for "most profanity used in a 40 minute time period."

7:21 - MD with an 8-0 run to take a 4-point lead. Gary Williams is taking a gamble by playing his PG Grievis Vasquez with 2 fouls. Maryland is dominating in the half court, and that is why they are building on their lead.

7:36 - MD just hit on a huge spurt after a T picked up by Coach K to take a 9 point lead. It's amazing the physicality of this game thus far, and I can honestly say I have never seen a Duke team in recent years get so few calls, despite being on the road. I'm sure Coach K felt the same way,

Ryan Potts
ryanpotts@hotmail.com

which is why he got T'ed.

7:57 - Duke with a 6-0 run out of halftime and they look somewhat energized. I bet Coach K read them some poetry and inspired them. Either that or Wojo did some interpretive dance.

8:12 - Whew. Duke managed to take the lead for a minute, but now trail by one at the under 12 timeout.

Incredible pace to this game right now, I am amazed at MDs inside game and Duke's transition game right now - just great offensive performances.

8:18 - Singler and Paulus pick up back to back 4th fouls which will cause Duke some major problems down the stretch. With 9:42 to play Duke has the lead, but can they sustain it with their foul troubles?

8:25 - Under 8 timeout and Duke has a 4 point lead. MD needs to keep pounding the ball inside, as Duke has no answer and is in foul trouble.

8:36 - Duke has extended the lead out to 9 with 4:29 left to play. Maryland will certainly have one more run in them, it remains to be seen if Duke can handle it. Nolan Smith has been huge for the Blue Devils in the second half.

8:38 - Immediately after I type that, Maryland nails a three to cut the lead down to six. This one is definitely going down to the wire.

8:42 - After Duke runs some clock, Greg Paulus (Sperhero alter ego=Captain Turnover) turns it over to MD and allows the Terps to creep closer.

8:44 - James Gist nails a three and the Terps are coming back from behind the arc and not inside. Duke shooting some big FT's right now.

8:46 - Huge bucket from Nelson on a drive to the hoop. Duke is really hurting offensively with Nolan Smith on the bench with an undisclosed injury. Maryland ball with 54 seconds to play.

8:48 - Ridiculous foul call on Singler for his 5th foul. Scratch that, I just saw the replay and he did foul him. Gist makes one of two and Duke is now on the line shooting FT's again.

8:54 - It looks like Duke is going to pull this one out-incredible comeback from the Blue Devils, particularly battling foul trouble. MD is peaking at the right time, and I think they will ultimately make the NCAA tournament at the end of the season.

Duke goes to Chapel Hill in 10 days - then we will find out if they are ready for prime time.

lem is accountability. "You can't use the money for economic development and you can't co-mingle occupancy tax money with other funds. If you do, taxpayers can sue the county and require that the money be paid back out of the commissioners' pockets," she said. "The thought is that chambers' primary duty is to promote business in their communities and they have private members who pay dues for that."

She said it has been established by law, that chambers can use the money to promote general tourism in an area, but they can't use it to promote one business, can't spend it on everyday chamber business activities, or co-mingle it in any way.

"There are a lot of cases out there when dealing with a private corporation like chambers of commerce, where a precise contract is needed and accountability procedures set up, so taxpayers know what they are getting for their money," she said. "The courts have been very specific about this. Regardless of the fact that chambers of commerce acted in all times in an honest way and with the best of intentions, the N.C. Supreme Court has been very clear."

She said contracts and strict accountability procedures keeps chambers safe, the county safe and taxpayers assured that the money levied is being used for the purposes for which it is collected.

"If you turn public funds over to an entity, you need an agreement with them because they have to be audited and you have to establish what the public purpose is," said Moxley. "With a TTA, the county remits the occupancy tax to the authority and it can contract with organizations in Franklin, Highlands and Nantahala, but the county finance director is treasurer for the TTA."

She said the fact that both the Franklin and Highlands visitor centers are housed with the chambers of commerce could be an issue.

Linda Harbuck, of Franklin Chamber of Commerce, admitted that co-mingling does take place. "I'm not going to lie, if it's slow and I need help stuffing envelopes, I have the visitor center employees do it," she said.

Moxley said that's precisely the issue. "Technically, that grant money has to be accounted for dollar for dollar. You need accountability to account for time associated with the money if it's county funds."

Horton said Haywood County uses a TTA which allocates the tax proceeds to different groups, with the chambers just one of the recipients.

"Accountability is the key issue," he said. "Throughout the state, people want to know what the money is spent on and how it specifically affects their economy."

Harbuck said Jackson County now uses a TTA to allocate the funds and Cashiers and Sylva get a portion granted to them and it appears to be working well.

If a TTA was established, the county finance officer would be responsible for the funds and their disbursement.

Commissioner Bob Simpson would like some of the tax collected to be used to promote Macon County as a destination and not just specific towns like Highlands and Franklin.

"We want tourism, but we don't do anything to get them here. We want to get them here, keep them here and get them to come back," he said. "Tourism money equals a strong economy and more tax revenue which means we can keep taxes low."

Mike Grubermann and Hank Ross, commissioners from Franklin and Highlands, respectively, both said they think the chambers know best how to market their areas.

"For instance, the Highlands Chamber of Commerce targets only folks seeking out second homes," said Ross. "Without knowing numbers, I wouldn't be comfortable allocating money to advertise the county unless I know it would be affective."

Simpson said using the money to target second home buyers is an economic development issue and can't be done with occupancy tax money.

Grubermann said each local area knows best how to handle its tourists and what it can offer and what it can deliver. "County ads would be more economic development oriented," he said. "When you get into tourism, it's a local thing."

Josh Drake, the Franklin lodging representative, said advertising for Macon County hasn't been done in the past and it won't happen unless a TTA is formed which could oversee promotions for each entity and the county, too. "Marketing the county could be beneficial for all," he said.

Everyone agreed that the 15% taken out of occupancy tax proceeds by the county the last couple of years for administrative expenses is too much and talk revolved around decreasing it to the old figure of 3%-5% with the a portion used to fund a TTA promoter.

For 2006-2007, the Highlands Chamber of Commerce received $260,000 and the Franklin Chamber of Commerce received $140,000. Projections for Highlands for 2007-2008 are $280,000.

The group will meet a final time on Wednesday, Feb. 6 at 4 p.m. to finalize its recommendation for presentation at the Macon County Commission meeting Feb. 11.

Present at the meeting were Macon County Commissioners co-chairs Bob Simpson and Brian McClellan, Bob Kieltyka, of Highlands Chamber of Commerce; Linda Harbuck, of Franklin Chamber of Commerce; Ron Baker, Nantahala lodging representative; Josh Drake, Franklin lodging representative; Hank Ross and Dennis DeWolf, Town of Highlands commissioners; and Mike Grubermann, Town of Franklin commissioner. Neither Kieltyka, Harbuck or DeWolf are voting members.

So far, Highlands' occupancy representative, Rick Siegel, owner of the seasonal 4 1/2 Street Inn bed and breakfast, hasn't attended a meeting. — Kim Lewicki ing among different buildings and facilities to take advantage of different peak use periods through dual use or remote parking," he said.

He said a number of jurisdictions allow on-street public parking within 200 ft. to 500 ft. to be counted toward the fulfillment of on-site parking requirements at a one-to-one or .75 ratio.

"This is typically seen in downtowns or other areas where land use activities are clustered, or mixed," he said. "It allows parking facilities to be used more efficiently and allows for reduction in the amount of impervious surface which would be needed for on-site parking consequently reducing storm water runoff."

He favors two of the three scenarios - using existing public parking or dual-use parking, but said dual-use requirements are much more complicated.

"Dual-use parking allows businesses in close proximity to each other with different primary hours of usage to share parking to meet required on-site parking requirements. However, to be effective and enforceable, a number of criteria must be met including determining the percentage of parking deemed available for dual-parking which can vary from 50% to 100%."

Additional criteria includes a to-scale map indicating the location of existing spaces and proposed dual-use spaces; proof that the sites will not overlap during hours of operation; documentation of hours of operation and peak business hours of both business; a written shared parking agreement between both businesses filed with the town which acts as a third party; should a business use and business hours change, the agreement is terminated; change of ownership of either parcel will require an agreement renewal; safe pedestrian access between businesses required via connecting sidewalks and not across major roadways; and clear signage identifying reserved spaces and hours of reservation would be required.

"Obviously, dual-use parking is more complicated but could serve a purpose when readily available public parking isn't available, like at Don Leon's, but a traffic engineer would be required to verify claims of usage during off- and peak-hours," he said.

Board member Linda Clark said either scenario would eliminate increasing impervious areas in town since parking areas whether public or private could serve two uses.

"We have a lot more public spaces than we used to. Are we being wise saying what business can open in town when we require on-site parking when we already have parking they could use if we recognize these public spaces?" she asked.

Cooley said Highlands should want to minimize impervious areas and this is one way to do it.

"You could opt to credit public parking first or give them the option to use dual-use, but they can't double-dip. They would have to pick one," he said.

Using four restaurants outside the B1 district where businesses aren't required to supply parking as examples, Cooley drew up a scenario concerning Wild Thyme, Fireside, Don Leon's and Nick's using public parking spaces within 200 ft. and 300 ft.

Wild Thyme has 15 public spaces within 200 feet and 32 public spaces within 300 feet. If it was allowed to use the 15 spaces, seats could be increased from the current 30 to 66.75; if allowed to use the 32 spaces, seats could increase 102.

"We could stay in business with the 33 extra seats," said Carter Bruns, co-owner of Wild Thyme."

Fireside doesn't have a seat problem like Wild Thyme which under the current scenario has six on-site spots and seven off-site spots for 30 seats, but if Fireside could use public parking on Main Street in front of Wright Square, the private back lot would no longer be necessary.

"As it is now, I have the expense of maintaining a 10,000 sq. ft. parking lot - paving it, marking it, snow removal - but if I don't need it, I could sell the lot," said Shultz.

If allowed to use the 27 public parking spaces within 200 feet along Main Street Fireside, would be allowed to have 60.75 seats. He said that's all he needs.

Don Leon's, which currently uses on-site parking and remote parking at Furniture South, would get 6.75 seats if allowed to use three public spaces within 200 feet and 15.75 seats if allowed to use public parking within 300 feet.

Board member Pat Taylor wondered if allowing restaurants to use public, dual-use or remote parking would cause "seat creep."

"I'd like us to come up with a situation where everyone can come into compliance, but does that allow people to put in more tables so that eventually we are back to the same spot which is not enough parking to support the table count?" he asked. "When these restaurants opened they were in compliance, then businesses expanded and all of a sudden parking becomes an issue."

Town Administrator Richard Betz said as far as the town knows all the restaurants in town are in compliance but Wild Thyme had come to the Town Board requesting a change to the ordinance because with their seating calculations changed to 30 seats, they said they wouldn't be able to stay in business.

Board member Mike Bryson said at a recent Town Board meeting a commissioner suggested restaurants off Main Street couldn't use the public parking because employee parking regulations for businesses on Main Street force those businesses to use the public parking in other districts.

"As far as I know, the businesses off Main Street pay the same taxes as people on Main Street. Why can't the businesses in town use the parking the town has pro-

Some of us are enjoying the excitement of the current Presidential campaigns and eagerly await the outcome of each primary contest. of the Euro soaring while the value of the dollar plunges is by chance. Remember when there was a shadow idea floating around that the U.S. was the only super power and that was a bad thing? I wonder where that got started. And I wonder why.

Let's see if we can connect some dots. First, our educational system is in the toilet. Out kids are dummed-down to the point where they rank last in the developed countries in the world in science and math. Why was this allowed to happen? Why was this encouraged to happen? Uneducated kids equal no more super power. If the system needs to teach children English before they are taught math and science, what does that do to the rate at which all kids are taught?

Why the big push for diversification? Why encourage the young ones to seek their roots rather than assimilate into the great melting-pot society that has served us so well for a 100 years and more? Why does the national media seem bent on destroying our image? Why does Joe Six-pack feel so helpless to improve his position in life?

There have been rumors circulating for decades about the power of certain organizations and their desire to create a one-world government. The organizations are the Bilderberg Group, the Trilateral Commission and the Council on Foreign Relations. Conspiracists have for years been derided for thinking these groups have an extraordinary influence on human affairs.

There are certain events that I have a hard time understanding. One is the election of Jimmy Carter. When Carter entered the Democratic Party presidential primaries in 1976, he was considered to have little chance against nationally better known politicians. He had name recognition of 2%. When he told his family of his intention to run for President, his mother asked "President of what?"

Another is the election of Bill Clinton. Running as a throwaway candidate against a hugely popular Geo. H. W. Bush, Clinton overcame a beating in the Iowa primary and being behind in New Hampshire to become the candidate and President.

After being given up for dead last summer, McCain now leads the polls. How? Why? Carter, Clinton and McCain are members of the Council on Foreign Relations as well as Cheney, Katie Couric, Diane Sawyer, Leslie Stahl, Brian Williams and Dan Rather.

While Congress gets most of the attention, the Executive branch does much of the earth-shaking activity. As an example, rightly or wrongly, President Bush is responsible for our involvement in Iraq, which has required a huge investment in deterring terrorism and severely testing the resolve of the people. I don't choose this opportunity to debate the wisdom of the war, just to note the power of the President.

The North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) was initially promoted by President Geo. H. W. Bush and was ratified in 1993 after President Bill Clinton made it a major legislative priority. NAFTA can be credited with the de facto deindustrialization of the U.S. It didn't feel good to me at the time it was passed, and it feels worse now.

A few months ago, I wrote about the North American Union being formed, in the likeness of the European Union. This initiative has been carried out by the Executive branch without the involvement of Congress. In the final analysis, it opens our borders, both north and south.

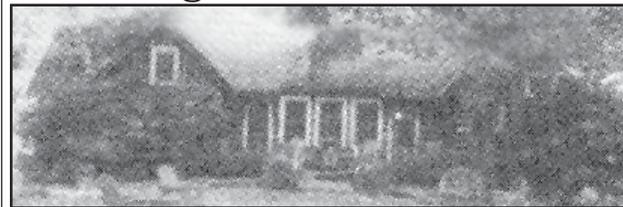

And now we learn from WorldNet-Daily "President Bush signed an agreement creating a 'permanent body' that commits the U. S. to 'deeper economic integration,' without ratification by the Senate as a treaty or passage by Congress as a law.

The Transatlantic Economic Integration between U. S. and the European Union was signed on April 30 (2007) at the White House by Bush, German Chancellor Angela Merkel, the current president of the European Council, and European Commission President Jose Manuel Barroso. The document acknowledges the economy remains in the forefront of globalization, arguing that the U. S. and the European Union 'seek to strengthen transatlantic economic integration.'

This agreement finalizes the 2005 U.S.-EU Summit Declaration on Enhancing Transatlantic Economic Integration and Growth. I don't think that the value

More about conservation easements

By Mercedes Heller
President HCLT

The Highlands Cashiers Land Trust completed six conservation easements in 2007, for landowners wishing to ensure that their land is forever preserved and protected from development. Total acreage protected by these conservation easements is approximately 300 acres of pristine mountain land. Another ten conservation easements are currently in progress and will be completed in 2008.

Many people seek more information about conservation easements. For example: What are they? What are the benefits? What will happen to my land after I am gone? And, the list of questions goes on. This article will attempt to answer those and other questions as well as explain why easements are so important in the conservation movement.

A conservation easement is a legal document that contains permanent restrictions on the use or development of land. In essence, it is a voluntary contract entered into between a landowner (the grantor) and a land trust such as HCLT (the grantee) for the purpose of preserving certain conservation values of the property. These values include wildlife habitat, forests, open space, agricultural lands, scenic vistas, or historic structures.

The land trust (grantee) has the responsibility to enforce the use restrictions contained in a conservation easement and will periodically inspect the property to verify compliance with the terms of the conservation easement. Future owners also will be bound by the easement's terms, thus the land trust's responsibility is perpetual.

The conservation values of each parcel of land are unique. Each easement must be individually drafted to reflect both the specific conservation values and the goals and desires of the landowner. There are, however, certain activities that most conservation easements uniformly prohibit. These include surface mining, industrial uses, non-agricultural commercial uses, construction of buildings and homes (unless otherwise reserved in one or more home sites) and other similar uses which by their nature would not protect the conservation values.

To further explain the reservation of one or more home sites on the easement property, a landowner may reserve the right for a certain number of sites that can be developed into single-family residences and sold or kept by the landowner to pass on to family members. These home sites would remain restricted by the conservation easement in order to minimize the effect of such development on the conservation values of the land.

The number of sites the landowner can reserve will depend upon various factors particular to each easement, including the size of the easement and the proposed location of the sites in relation to the conservation values to be protected. These sites are identified in the agreement to avoid location in important wildlife habitat and to protect scenic views.

A land owner may have a number of motives for granting a conservation easement. The most noble is the desire to ensure that the land is forever preserved and protected from development. However, there are significant tax incentives placing land in conservation easements, including federal and state charitable income tax deductions, state income tax credits, federal and state estate tax deductions and exclusions (including some post-mortem benefits) and real property tax relief.

For more information about conservation easements and the role played by the Highlands- Cashiers Land Trust in holding these easements, call Dr. Gary Wein, Executive Director of HCLT, at 828-526-1111; or email hitrust@earthlink.net; or check our website at hicashlt.org.

The Macon County Soccer Club sponsored a 19-hour referee clinic held over the second weekend of January. The course was taught at The Center of Family Medicine and supported by funds from The Macon County Challenge League. All participants successfully completed the grueling course taught by George Gately from Charlotte. Graduates are now able to referee at all levels of soccer including competitive tournaments. The Macon County Soccer Club would like to thank these individuals for sacrificing a weekend to improve the game of soccer in Macon County.

January school board summary

By Sally Hansen
Reporter

The school board moved quickly through its agenda, Monday night.

Macon County Schools Superintendent Dan Brigman informed the board that the request for plans to move forward on the proposed Highlands soccer field had been sent to the Facilities Review Committee, which was made up of two County Commissioners and two School Board members. These requests also included the proposed 5-6 middle school and the gymnasium and East Franklin Elementary School. It was decided that the project would be funded, as well as a metal roof for the gym and updating of restroom facilities.

Chairman Donny Edwards added that the Board should also ask for air conditioning to be added to the gyms at Franklin High School and Macon Middle School, as well as the gym under construction at Nantahala School. McCoy made a motion to formally approve these changes, and Cabe seconded the motion, which passed unanimously.

The Franklin High School Band and director Buddy Huckabee were recognized for their outstanding performance at the Valero Alamo Bowl in San Antonio, Texas. Superintendent Dan Brigman presented Huckabee with a certificate of excellence for the band's participation in the competition on December 27, 2007.

Next, Bill Van Horn, vice-president of the Nantahala Hiking Club (NHC), spoke about an ongoing program primarily focused on getting more kids out in nature. Through a program called "A Trail to Every Classroom," which is funded by a grant through the Appalachian Trail Conservancy, the NHC is offering workshops to teachers in order to encourage hiking to be a lifelong physical activity. "No skills or equipment are required, so it's something everyone can do," Van Horn said.

The idea is to get both PE teachers and classroom teachers to get their students involved in outdoor activities by having both outdoor trips and actually holding classes that follow the NC Education Standards in outdoor classrooms.

The workshops are designed to help teachers design lesson plans that will be successful in these outdoor classrooms in subjects including Language Arts, Math, Science and Social Studies.

Van Horn also mentioned that the program is designed to have a lifelong impact on students. "Hiking on the Appalachian Trail can be a foundation for healthful living, active learning, service learning and place-based education," Van Horn said.

Board member Roberta Swank thanked Van Horn for giving awareness to the program. "Young people need to be out in nature," Swank said.

Macon Middle School (MMS) Assistant Principal Deborah Adams asked the Board for permission to hold an extra fundraiser for the school. It will benefit the MMS Fine Arts department, which includes the Band, the Chorus, and the Art departments.

man Empire was disintegrating and the "Great Powers" were jockeying to pick up the spoils. England and France, being the victors in WWI, got to chop up the Middle East into their respective zones of influence and we are reaping the benefits of their handiwork to this day.

I think a strong case can be made for the proposition that the twisted Third Reich and the horrors of WWII were a direct consequence of the thwarting of the natural power progression as documented in Kennedy's book. The powerful creative and cultural forces that are a large part of any nation's rise to world power status were crushed in Germany by the WWI surrender terms and when Hitler promised the Germans a path to greatness the people responded.

A Haitian Heart

Rev. Brian Sullivan
Episcopal Church of the Incarnation

I have just returned from Haiti. It was a rather self-serving trip. One I felt compelled to do, so that I could see first-hand all the good works our church is doing. Before leaving, I saw the pictures, heard the stories, met some of the people, and even attempted to read the book I was given. I categorized it all in my filing-cabinet-of-life, a cabinet where I conveniently place similar experiences.

When I heard a word like "poverty" to describe Haiti, I figured it was comparable to the homeless folks that I spent time with in Atlanta. These were people who were surrounded by wealth, but couldn't seem to pick themselves out of the cycle of racism, drugs, alcohol, or mental-illness.

With the words "poor living conditions," I filed it with the multi-room house to which my youth group delivered a Thanksgiving dinner. Upon entering the house, I was met with a smell of live chickens, which could be seen through the floorboards.

With the word "disease," I had a file marked "AIDS clinic" which I visited as a young seminarian. It was measurable to seeing people withering away despite the prescriptions and care they were given by the clinicians.

With a word like "broken heart," I filed it under the child who lost his parents at a young age and was raised under the same roof with his brothers, uncle and grandparents.

In the first few hours in Haiti, I realized I had to build a whole new filing cabinet. The things that I saw and experienced were indefinable by anything I had previously experienced.

Poverty is no longer being homeless in Atlanta. Poverty is now defined by a six-year-old boy in a beautifully pressed red-checkered shirt walking three miles to school. On an empty stomach he embarks on a daily journey which begins every morning at 5:30. This journey winds along a major highway made of bedrock. He dreams of a graduation when he can patiently wait for a job in a town where there are no jobs anywhere despite his expertise in metal work and making cement bricks or his college degree in medical technology.

Poor living conditions are now defined as a banana thatch hut, next to a banana thatch hut, next to a banana thatch hut for miles on end with no bathroom. These conditions consist of cooking over a charcoal fire made from the only tree within walking distance of a town surrounded by scrub in a country deforested up to its boundary line on one side and as a result depleted of its topsoil which can be found in

A look at life inside Kenya's terror

• Note: Sarah Clark offers her experiences during the recent turmoil in Kenya. She is a former resident of Highlands and a member of the Community Bible Church, which sponsors her parents' ministry in Kenya. She also freelances for a Christian news magazine, WORLD. She wrote this very personal article showing the inner struggle as she lives through the violent times in Kenya.

By Sarah E. Clark
Contributor

It is frustrating to live in the middle of injustice. Some of my friends no longer have homes or food. Others burn homes and destroy lives. Yet the two leaders continue playing the blame game. They are both to blame. President Mwai Kibaki unfairly reclaimed his position. Police in Kisumu killed 50 rioting youths. The opposition leader, Raila Odinga declared it genocide. His supporters are burning, rioting, and killing.

I recognize reality - I cannot change everything. I can't make a difference everywhere. I cannot solve every problem. Nevertheless, I can do my part and believe others will do theirs.

What is going on around me makes me afraid. Not being able to stop the rampaging boys makes me mad. Seeing hungry children and not being able to feed them makes me sad. Not being able to leave the gate and see what is really happening drives me crazy. Listening to inaccurate reporting makes me feel like trashing the radio. Yet, I have done something. I have written the truth about Londiani for the world to read.

There are masses of people in town, refugees at the Catholic Church, police station and railway station. At the Catholic Church, people and their belongings occupy every bit of ground. Many saved some belongings and food. Furniture, mattresses, blankets, bags of clothes, sacks of maize and potatoes are piled on carts or in heaps on the ground. The food will not last long and soon children will be crying because of hunger pangs.

The young men are still on the rampage but four truckloads of soldiers arrived this morning.

I just finished packing up my life. The threat was issued early afternoon. "If the Kikuyu did not leave then the youths would burn our compound." The Kikuyu fled.

I have friends among the rampaging gang of boys. They were trained. This violence was planned. They were paid. Someone is cooking their food. They have gathered from many miles away. They now number anywhere between 1,000-2,000. They are determined to drive away all the Kikuyu - and they are succeeding.

Looking at the big picture, I think, "Just get me out of here." Then I think of individuals and it becomes difficult.

Kenya will never be the same. The economy has suffered a five-year set back - at best. Londiani will never be the same. So many will never return and those who do will retain an element of fear and hostility.

Tomorrow morning we travel to Nairobi.

A friend recently expressed just how I feel, "I understand being in a position where you know more than you would like to, wishing you were naive as some of the other people smiling in the room around you." I know too much! I understand too much! I feel and think too much! I had to put it all out of my mind and not think.

Here in Nairobi it is easy to forget what is happening on the "outside." To forget the hungry children crying for invisible food. To forget the lorries packed with people and possessions. To forget large towns, now just charred remains.

Nairobi is a surreal world - it is not like the rest of Kenya. You can move about, you can drive on the roads, you don't need a police escort. Here businesses, restaurants and supermarkets are open. Even the movie theaters are open and showing the latest international hits. Here I have hot showers, cinnamon buns for breakfast, pizza for supper. Maybe I finally awoke from my bad dream. I hope the rest wake up soon.

directly by the hospital. Sleep studies have been done in conjunction with an outside firm. Franklin said the new program could generate substantial income for the hospital annually.

• As part of the committee's report, CFO Mike Daiken told board members that the hospital experienced a financial loss for the first quarter of the fiscal year (as expected) but that the loss was $130,000 less than budget projections. He said the average daily census for acute and swing-bed patients was down slightly from the prior year (9.5 compared to 10.8), and that the average census at the Fidelity Eckerd Living Center was 76 in December, down from 81 for the prior month. Chief of Staff Dr. Robert Buchanan pointed out that declining hospital admissions is a national trend that is likely to continue, in part because a new generation of antibiotics and medications allows many patients that previously had to be admitted to the hospital to be treated either at home or on an outpatient basis. The board briefly discussed the need for the hospital to adapt its planning and operations to take such trends into account.

• Vice President for Operations Frank Leslie reported on three major projects being undertaken by the hospital's Performance Improvement Committee this year that are designed to improve patient care the services. One project involves increase efforts to reduce the number and severity of falls for residents of the Living Center. While residents falling are always a cause for concern in any nursing facility (and hospital, as well), the center's staff is making fall reduction a major focus in the months ahead. The hospital is also focusing on perfecting its electronic barcoding system for dispensing patient medications. The hospital has had the computerized system that tracks and verifies the medications given to patients for several years, Leslie said. However, there have been problems with the equipment. He said that PI project will focus on trying new equipment and more in-depth training of staff. Finally a PI committee will look at additional opportunities to improve customer service, both for patients and for physicians who order tests and procedures from the hospital.

• During the Medical Staff report, Buchanan said several physicians are up for renewal of privileges. Based on the recommendation of the Medical Staff, the board approved the reappointments of family physician Thomas Lindsay, MD, emergency room physicians John C. Cannon, MD, and Craig C. Moore, MD, as well as part-time pathologist Thomas Crocker, MD. Buchanan also reported that the staff recommends granting additional vided?" he asked. "Do we have a parking problem, or is there enough parking for everyone if you're willing to walk?"

He said he counted empty public parking spaces on Pine and Fifth streets on Friday, July 6, and there were 56 empty spots.

Board Chairman Griffin Bell said it all depends on what side of town you're on. He said the west side doesn't have as much public parking as elsewhere in town.

Taylor said it all depends on the days and time of year. "Usually, if you're willing to park one street over there is parking, but everyone wants to pull up and get out right in front of the business they want to go to."

Board member Thomas Craig said the town has made incremental adjustments to its overall parking regulations over the years but hasn't done a "wholesale" approach.

"Are the requirements still relevant? When the fire marshal determines the number of seats it's a public safety issue. The number of parking spots isn't a public safety issue. The town has provided public parking over the years and it's time we took another look at it," he said.

In the end, the board agreed to request the Town Board to initiate an impartial, town-wide parking and traffic study. It also agreed to have Cooley draft two amendments to the parking ordinance - one to address public space usage and one to address dual-use.

To address updating the Land Use Plan, the board is having two meetings a month beginning on Feb. 11 at 5 p.m. and then at the regular meeting Feb. 25 at 5 p.m.

The board asked Cooley to have the draft amendments ready for the Feb. 11 meeting so the Planning Board can make it's recommendation to the Town Board at its Feb. 20 meeting.

"This should give us enough time," said Craig. "With the season approaching, we need to get this done so these businesses have an answer."

privileges to the two new general surgeons that will expand the range of procedures that can be done in the hospital's operating rooms. He said the staff agreed with general surgeons Augustus F. Dozier, MD, and William J. Noell, Jr. MD, that there are additional procedures that are within the capability of what can be handled safely by the surgical and nursing teams currently in place. The board approved the recommendation to add those procedures.

• In his report, President and CEO Ken Shull reminded the board that a survey team from the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations will soon be visiting the hospital as part of its three-year reaccreditation review.

Shull also reported that the hospital is making a major push to improve the quality of its food service. It has hired area chef and former restaurant owner David Sanborn to manage the hospital's kitchen (until recently Sanborn owned and managed Sid and Charlie's in Cashiers), and is adding some new equipment in the kitchen, the gift of a recent patient and donor who wanted to help the hospital upgrade its food.

The hospital's laboratory did very well during its recent unannounced review by a surveyor from the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations, Shull told the board. The lab is surveyed by JCAHO every two years. He praised the lab staff for their continuing efforts to keep standards high.

He also reported that family physician Patti B. Wheeler, MD and her part-time associate P. Richard Olson, MD, will be moving off campus to new offices on Hicks Road in Highlands. Dr. Wheeler remains on staff at the hospital and the hospital has offered to assist Dr. Wheeler in finding any additional equipment she may need, maintain electronic and computer connections with the hospital, and making the transition as smooth as possible.

• During his report, Foundation Executive director Russell Harris gave a recap of fundraising last year, saying the Foundation had conducted two appeals for the general fund. Some 525 donors contributed to those drives, raising nearly half a million dollars, including $140,000 for capital projects. Harris said the foundation is currently embarking on a new program that will recognize those donors who have named the hospital in their wills and to encourage others to join them.

Crafts Festival to promote the arts and community involvement," Adams said. The MMS PTO would be requesting donations and would be auctioning off the items complete with the donated talents of a professional auctioneer.

The date is tentatively set for Thursday, May 15, 2008, but Adams noted that there is a possibility of moving it to Saturday, May 17, in anticipation of a better turnout over the weekend. The board unanimously agreed to go ahead with the fundraiser.

Brigman then asked the board to approve a Substance Abuse Task Force survey that is being coordinated by Marci Holland. The survey would be distributed this spring among students in grades 8-11, and the data will be used to develop programs for preventative measures.

Swank suggested that the data be combined with the annual surveys that are conducted by the Macon County Health Department. Board Member Susie McCoy made a motion to accept the survey, and Swank seconded the motion, which passed unanimously.

Finance Directory Betty Waldroop informed the Board that the yearly audit by Dixon Hughes had cost $33,000 for the 2006-2007 school year, and that the quote for the current school year's audit from Dixon Hughes was $40,500. Board Member Tommy Baldwin said that the state recommends that school boards only use the same company for audits for three consecutive years. "I'd like to see it put out for bid," Baldwin said.

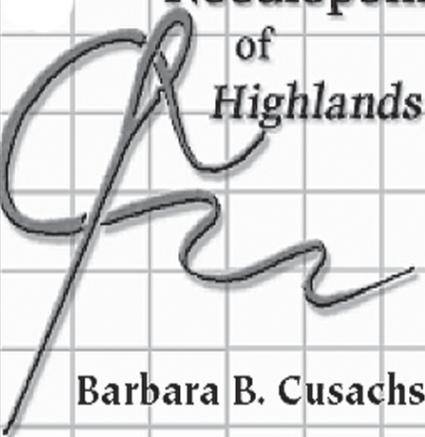

This prompted some discussion amongst Board Members. Swank mentioned that it is hard to find local companies to do these types of audits, so the Board would probably have to look to bigger cities like Winston-Salem and Greensboro to find a company other than Dixon Hughes.

Board member Tommy Cabe suggested that since they already had a quote from

Dixon Hughes for the upcoming audit, the Board could use the same company for now and then put it out for bid for the next crease four percent annually; that the public school building capital fund revenues from the state would remain at $240,000 annually; and that lottery funds would remain at $212,000 annually.

The funding would be for capital projects only with no consideration for operational costs or other county increases which may occur.

“Even with the additional funding for phases one and two, by 2015-2016 we will have serviced much of our debt and will be close to where we are now which is about $3.5 million in debt,” she said.

Commissioner Jim Davis said had the Land Transfer Tax passed it could have funded all of this. “Regardless, we’ll still have the lowest tax rate in the state.”

Highlands Transfer Station

Also discussed at the work session was the interlocal agreement the county hopes to enter into with the Town of Highlands concerning the transfer station upgrades at the land fill on Rich Gap Road.

County Manager Jack Horton said after he and Sanitation Director Chris Stahl met with Highlands Town Administrator Richard Betz and Town Engineer Lamar Nix last week, he feels an agreement can be reached.

“That want a 10-year memorandum of understanding obligating each side to use of the landfill and agreements made,” said Horton. “If either side renigs, they are given credit for the first year of operations and they are responsible for a percentage of a portion of construction costs of the project. Basically we want a long enough time to recoup the county’s investment.”

He said Highlands wants to access the the transfer station Saturdays and Sundays the landfill. However, tipping fees will be accessed for Construction & Debris waste and for Highlands' commercial garbage. "They say they can separate out commercial garbage from residential garbage," said Horton. "Once we figure that amount out, we will bill the town once a month based on tonnage." No decisions were made, and the work session was continued to Wednesday, Feb. 6 at 6 p.m. in the board room.

and understands that its crew has to undergo state certification first. He said if the town and county enter into a interlocal agreement at the Feb. 11 county commission meeting, the county can borrow the $1 million needed to fund its portion of the project and get started. "Hopefully we will be completed in three months, if not we will have to close the landfill June 30 until Cashiers are considered one but they're two different cities in two different counties.

"It's important that we strengthen these bonds for both the public's and our officers' safety," he said. "When we have the ability and the authority granted through the mutual aid agreement we can better serve the public and assist each other."

Both towns are in the 30th judicial district and will be talking to the legislature to see if magistrates in both counties can enter into a cooperative agreement, too. As it stands now, even with the mutual aid agreement, arrests made by a Jackson County officer have to be handled by the Jackson County magistrate in Sylva and arrests made by the Highlands police have to be handled by the Macon County magistrate in Highlands. However, they can use each other's departments and facilities, if needed.

"If a Jackson County deputy picks someone up for DWI close to the Macon County line, it is more advantageous for him to come to the Highlands' magistrate office to conduct the intoxilyzer test rather it's ready."

Highlands' portion is expected to cost between $400,000 and $475,000.

As has been the practice in the past, no one will be charged a tipping free at the landfill in Franklin for residential garbage, but everyone even J&B Disposal, will be charged a transfer fee to cover the costs of hauling the waste down the mountain to than driving all the way back to Sylva," said Highlands Magistrate Pat Taylor. "The quicker the process the more accurate the reading which is the reason we had an intoxilyzer installed here in Highlands instead of driving 40 minutes to Franklin."

With much of what's considered Highlands outside the town limits the Highlands Police Department entered into a mutual aid agreement with the Macon County Sheriff's Department some time ago.

The agreements both with Jackson and Macon counties means a law enforcement presence will always be evident, said Harrell.

Ashe said Jackson County has a mutual aid agreement with 16 counties in Western North Carolina.

Even without a formal mutual aid agreement, state statutes allows neighboring counties to assist each other in crisis situations.

"This mutual aid agreement makes assistance from Jackson County readily available and legal," said Harrell.

own are condemned to everlasting torment?" They weren't. There was an elaborate system of sacrifices and ceremonies practiced in a small portion of scripture known as The Old Testament. This system was directed by God for the atonement of man's sin. God used two chapters in Genesis to record creation but used 50 chapters (13 in Exodus; 18 in Leviticus; 13 in Numbers; 2 in Deuteronomy; 4 in Hebrews) to explain the construction of the Tabernacle, its features, furniture, and the services to be held there.

God's instructions for the task were detailed and rich in symbolism. They were detailed because He wanted man to have a path to forgiveness, and rich in symbolism because it told of God's love and mercy.

What of Hell? Hell was not intended for man but for Satan and the other fallen angels. Hell is a terrible place, for sure, but God doesn't send anyone there. As C. S. Lewis once said, "There are only two types of people in the end; those who say to God, 'Thy will be done,' and those to whom God says, in the end, 'Thy will be done.' All that are in Hell, chose it." God respects our decisions even when He disagrees with them.

When Ms. Brugger said that "Mr. Chastain seems to think the idea that the universe is for experience is a horrible concept because it means a 'learning experience without end; I for one would rather have a perpetually growing and expanding awareness than a static eternity spent in an unchanging heaven."

First of all, I was merely pointing out the apparent contradiction in the Oneness belief that God would eventually awaken, and the belief that God must experience an infinite amount of experiences before awakening. Secondly, this description of Heaven is neither appealing nor accurate. What will Heaven really be like? In Heaven we will laugh (Luke 6:21), there will be feasts (Revelation 19:9) of the finest quality (Isaiah 25:6), we will also grow in knowledge (Ephesians 2:6). Jonathan Edwards said, "how soon do earthly lovers come to an end of their discoveries of each other's beauty; how soon do they see all there is to be seen! But in Heaven there is eternal progress with new beauties always being discovered."

Imagine discussing science with Isaac Newton or Thomas Edison; mathematics with Pascal; literature with C. S. Lewis or J. R. R. Tolkien; the power of fiction with Victor Hugo, Dostoyevsky, or Tolstoy; God's attributes with A. W. Tozer; theology with Augustine or Aquinas. Who said Heaven would be boring? No pain, death, separation, or sorrow sounds pretty good to me. Personally, I look forward to seeing loved ones who have gone on and being able to wrap my arms around them and never have to let go again.

Christ once asked his disciples, "Whom say ye that I am?" (Matthew 16:15). C. S. Lewis said there were only three answers to that question that are open to us: Liar, Lunatic, or Lord. I submit to you that this is the most important question you will ever answer. Who do you say He is?

And a broken heart is now described as a little girl with a huge, brighter-than-life smile on her face walking up to the car of her teacher. A teacher who then turns to us and informs us that her mother is in the morgue next door to the school which she will be walking to for hours in the morning. To further understand the causes of the mother's death, see the definition of disease.

As I absorbed the experiences that dwell in my new filing-system-of-life, three words and their new definitions eclipsed all the rest – faith, hope, and love.

Faith is now defined as a church packed to the rafters with people who came for one thing: to experience the living Christ who brings good news to the poor, lifts up the broken hearted, release to the captive, and proclaims a year of the Lord's salvation.

Hope is a young anthropologist visiting from the United States, meeting a Haitian Episcopal priest in Cange (the poorest part of Haiti), who periodically goes back to the United States to build relationships, get a Harvard medical degree, and consistently returns to his new home in Haiti to systematically eradicate disease one person at a time (for a clearer definition read the book Mountains Beyond Mountains to find out how Partners in Health is saving the worlds in Haiti, Peru, Rwanda and Russia).

Love is being offered the only cold beer for miles, eating fried bananas and watching the sun go down with three soft spoken young men who want nothing more than to get an education and come back to "help my people."

If you ever wonder what the face of Christ looks like, you can glean it from the words of your favorite preacher, imagine it from the pages of scripture, or feel it in worship and praise. Or you can come face to face with Christ by being with the poor. If you choose the latter, be ready to have a whole new vocabulary, a whole new group of friends, and a broken heart. A heart broken wide open to a faith, a hope, and a love that you never knew existed. This is "a Haitian heart."

The Good News is that anyone can possess this heart. You don't even have to go to Haiti. The poor are right here in this community. Allow yourself to see the beauty of God through their eyes. In that moment you will see the Kingdom of God. You will feel the suffering of the world, and best of all, you will see the solution. It's simple.

All of us who are blessed enough to read this article have received the gifts that will solve poverty. Those gifts are a fusion of education and health care in a safe environment. However, there is the primary gift that makes it all possible, you most certainly have some in your pocket, and it is easily given. For a clearer definition see the definition of money. To give is to be the solution to poverty.

school year's audit. Baldwin disagreed, stating that he liked to do what the state recommended.

Attorney John Henning added that while he understood where Baldwin was coming from, there was no law that stated that the School Board had to change companies every three years, and that if the state wanted everyone to do so it would be really easy for them to enact a law requiring such a practice.

Cabe made a motion to keep Dixon Hughes for the current year's audit, and to put the account up for bid for the next year. McCoy seconded the motion, and it passed with opposition from Baldwin alone.

Brigman ended the meeting with a statement of appreciation to the local florists for upcoming deliveries to schools on Valentine's Day. He asked that anyone making deliveries to schools first contact the main office to find out which items are permissible to be delivered to schools, and what the delivery process is.

The next BOE meeting is Monday, Feb. 25.

THE SETUP:

The cube has 27 consecutive numbers in it, arranged in three layers with 9 numbers each. These numbers are arranged in a special pattern: For each layer, the sum of the three numbers in each row, column or diagonal, is 3 times its center number. Eight diagonals connect all 3 layers by running through the center number of the middle layer. Each diagonal contains 3 numbers equaling the total of the three center numbers. One of the diagonals is shown with circles.

THE CHALLENGE:

Start with the three center numbers for each layer and the other numbers given. Now pour a cup of coffee, pick up a pencil and eraser and try to figure out where the other numbers belong. Good Luck!

The first correct solution emailed earns a coupon for a FREE cup of coffee from Buck's Coffee Cafe on Main Street.

Object: Assign 9 different letters to each cell of 9 columns and 9 rows. In addition, nine 3 x 3 cells in the layout have the same nine different letters (this is similar to Sudoku but uses nine letters instead of nine numbers). A 'mystery word or phrase' using all nine different letters is designated by circled squares (other short words appear when solving, for which a list of meanings is provided). Every puzzle has a different 'mystery word or phrase' (no spaces).

How to Solve: Determine the nine different letters among those given. Try to solve the mystery word using the clue given and write it in. Other small words will appear in the puzzle. As in conventional crossword puzzles, a list of meanings for these ACROSS/ DOWN words is given and number positions shown. Doing them will speed up your solution to the puzzle. Using your powers of induction, inference and insight, place missing letters in all blank squares according to the rules noted above. Focus attention where the least number of letters are needed to complete a line, column or 3 x 3 cell.
