Weather predictions for Highlands

Just how realistic are winter predictions for Western North Carolina? If Tuesday’s early snowfall is any indication, perhaps predictions of a “numbing” winter for 2008-2009 are valid.

The Farmers’ Almanac is forecasting below-average temperatures for the rest of 2008 and the winter of 2009 for at least two-thirds of the country.

No one can remember when it actually snowed - not just flurried in Highlands - in October.

“I remember that it flurried on Oct. 7, 1955, but it wasn’t a real snow,” said Isabelle Chambers.

Her husband Tony said Isabelle’s father, Tudor Hall, who lived 1905-1985, said “he saw snow every month of every year he was alive except for in the months of July and August.”

Local historian Ran Shaffner couldn’t find any statistics on early snowfalls in Highlands, but said “it’s safe to say that a snowfall on Oct. 28 brought snow to the plateau”

Scarlet and russet colored leaves and drying hydrangeas - all tell tale signs of Fall - were accentuated by snowfall Tuesday, when about an inch fell during early morning hours. School was delayed two hours and bone-chilling winds blew winter weather and snow about Highlands earlier in the season than anyone can remember.

From the candidates

M C Commission & BOE hopefuls state their case for the last time before the election

Two candidates are vying for Charlie Leatherman’s seat on the Macon County Commission - Jimmy Goodman and Bobby Kupper.

In the school board race, 10 candidates look to fill four of the five seats - District I, Frieda Bennett and John Shear; District III, incumbent Tommy Baldwin and Brian Bateman; for the two seats for District IV, Alan Allman, Jimmy Breidlove, Gregg Jones, and Dwight Vinson and filling the District IV unexpired seat currently occupied by Roberta Swank is Swan and Bobby Bishop.

Each candidate was asked the same three questions.

Middle East expert presents ‘Iraq 101’

This begins a multipart series on Sandra Mackey’s talk

With ease, humor, precision, and charity, Middle East specialist Sandra Mackey explained the reasons for and the outcomes of the political atmosphere in Iraq, Iran, Pakistan, Afghanistan and Israel as applied to the U.S.

She addressed a standing-room only crowd at the Highlands Community Building at night of Oct. 20.

Having lived and worked in the region, she is considered an expert on the subject.

She has authored books and publications and appeared as a commentator on Middle East policy for CNN, Fox, ABC, ABC News, Nightline, CBS, CNN, NPR, BBC, Canadian Broadcasting and German Public Broadcasting.

She says like it or not, Middle Eastern countries are increasingly complex and central to the U.S. economic, health and security.

School system to launch new website

Teachers, administrators, parents and students will soon see a new website when they log on to www.mcsk-12.org.

Besides saving the district money, it will establish a unified look on the district website throughout the school system.

At Monday night’s school board meeting, Director of Technology Tim Burrel explained the reason for the new interface and what it will mean to the community.

“I am excited about several aspects of our new web portal,” he said. “The new SharePoint server system will really move us away from static, view only, web pages, we have now into a more dynamic and collaborative way of using our web sites.

“The internal side of the web based application will allow us to create team-based or department sites, meeting workspaces, shared calendars, surveys, document re-

Dear Editor,

North Carolina may have the country’s worst ballot. It is already causing confusion with early voters. And if the presidential race is close, it could change the outcome. Like a number of states, North Carolina allows its voters to choose a straight-party ticket. To do that, voters can mark one box and cast votes for all of the nominees of their preferred party.

But North Carolina’s ballot has an unexpected twist.

Even if a voter checks the straight-party box, he or she MUST VOTE SEPARATELY for a presidential candidate.

North Carolina’s ballot explains the need to check two boxes, and election officials make an effort to inform voters of this drill. But the ballot itself is still too confusing.

This peculiar form of straight-ticket voting was adopted in the 1960s, to help the state’s Democrats keep getting elected, even as a growing number of voters began to choose Republicans for president. Not surprisingly, North Carolina has an unusually high rate of under-votes, ballots that do not record a vote for president. In the last two presidential elections, the rate has been about double the national average.

Poor ballot design is a burden on all voters. Less-educated voters and the newly enrolled are even more likely to be confused and to end up not casting a vote for president. This year, North Carolina’s flawed ballot could again result in tens of thousands of votes being lost. That is particularly worrisome since polls indicate a very close presidential race in the state. And as we saw in 2000, a presidential election can be decided by a mere 537 votes.

It is too late to change the ballot for this year’s election, so election officials must do everything they can to explain to voters how the state’s straight-ticket voting works. When the election is over, North Carolina needs to consider a change in its straight-ticket voting, or require voters to choose candidates one by one.

Important issues transcend party lines

Beware: voting the ‘straight party ticket’ in North Carolina can mean a ‘no vote’ for the presidential candidate

Dear Editor,

With the election cycle coming to a close, we need to confront the realities of the coming four years. I would suggest the following areas of concern:

1. The world economy is dependent on the consumption patterns of the American public. While we have defined as a manufacturing country, we have an increased consumption at an unsustainable rate. We have been recently consuming goods and services at a level in excess of our income, as witnessed by our negative savings rate. This is in fact saying that we have borrowed the money to finance our lifestyle. Recovery from the current worldwide crisis is dependent on the United States resuming its position as the world’s consumer of choice. Unfortunately, this would depend on increased credit to the American public at a time when it is neither available nor advisable.

2. Our lifestyle is energy dependent. We need vehicles that are energy efficient. One way to address this is to use the diesel technology that is common in the rest of the world. We need to encourage efficiency by making vehicles under 10,000 GVW (which would include large pickup trucks) from a tax structure designed to recover road costs from over-the-road freight haulers. We also need to recognize that most car travel is by individual drivers and revisit our fixation on adapting new technology to the four-door sedan. Mass transit must become an available option for all Americans. We need no more now Interstate highways until it is proven that their needs statement cannot be served by mass transit.

3. Education needs to reflect the needs of society. We need to educate all of our citizens to their maximum potential and desires. College must become more affordable. Additionally, under No Child Left Behind, we have de-mated our vocational education system. We cannot design an education system based on all students attending college; we need to prepare the workers we need. Furthermore, we need to promote the idea that there is dignity (and a prosperous lifestyle) in skilled labor, and that failure to attain a college degree does not constitute failure. If we produce skilled workers, we will have a continuation of the mass influx of immigrant workers coming here for our higher paying skilled labor jobs. Currently, we have immigrant bricklayers making $15 per hour buying hamburgers from our dropouts making $7 per hour. Nature does not like a vacuum, and filling these jobs with enthusiastic, well trained American workers will remove the necessity of hiring immigrant labor. This needed change will also necessitate a shift in our value system, with the dignity of labor becoming once again part of our core belief system. Not Donald Trump, the entertainment star, or the high paid athlete, but the everyday American citizen must become an object of admiration, and not campaign caricature.

4. We need to realize that not all solutions are related to partisan politics. While we need to recognize the need to restructure our health care and education delivery systems, the solutions need to be bipartisan. There may be worthwhile elements offered by a variety of sources. Our compulsion to see everything as blue and red talking points reduces our ability to objectively evaluate our situation. Social Security, national security, and the implementation of available long-term environmental programs are issues that demand our collective will and ability.

5. There is nothing guaranteed concerning the future dominant position of the United States. We have profited by the intelligence, sacrifice, and courage of those who preceded us. If we continue to fail to realistically and intelligently address our needs, we run the risk of joining other dominant nation-states in history as a topic of analysis to determine the causes of our decline. It should be mission of all Americans to try to eliminate future elections where personalities and fringe issues are the prism through which we view our choices.

Remember those overseas

Dear Editor,

The collection of gifts to send to our overseas military is gaining momentum. Many people are bringing paperbacks, CDs, DVDs and other donations to the collection point under the flag by the Club House at Chestnut Hill on Buck Creek Road, just ½ mile off Rt. 64.

The response has been heartwarming. From Kuwait: “Your shipment was a great hit. Nearly 30% of the books are already gone and I had a high speed NCO that really appreciated the Ts. I gave the phone card to our new Lieutenant that has his fiancé deployed in Iraq and we are all still consuming the edible goodies.”
The SALE price is $379,900 for 2,300+- sq. ft. — just $165 per sq. ft. finished – in this new office complex on N.C. 106.

The LEASE price is $1,995 a month with an option to purchase.

ABC Cardinal part of Red Ribbon week events at Highlands School

To kick off Red Ribbon Week at Highlands School, Mayor Don Mullen read a proclamation and Police Chief Bill Harrell gave everyone red ribbons to wear. Each day there were activities commemorating the event whose focus is drug use prevention through education. Through ABC Store funding, two banners were purchased as well as educational displays and materials for high school, middle school, and elementary school. Funding also paid for the ABC Cardinal to come educate younger students. The Macon County Sheriff's Department also made presentations about Risky Behaviors at two assemblies. Red Ribbon Week is a vehicle for communities to take a stand for the hopes and dreams of children through a commitment to drug prevention and education and a personal commitment to live drug-free lives in a drug-free America. Red Ribbon Week commemorates the ultimate sacrifice made by DEA Special Agent Enrique “Kiki” Camarena, who died at the hands of drug traffickers in Mexico while fighting the battle against illegal drugs destined for this country. The Highlands School Red Ribbon committee includes Christine Murphy, Tracy Hedden, Carla Harris, Jim Draheim, Thomas Jessup, Carol Bowen, Sallie Taylor, and Resource Officer Ronnie Castle.

Excercise your right; do your duty on Nov. 4 – VOTE

Dear Editor,

We’d like to add our voice to the chorus of those urging you to vote. This election is of vital importance to our nation and our future and it demands your careful consideration. Please don’t allow yourself to be distracted from casting your ballot.

Whichever way you intend to vote, while you’re waiting to cast your ballot, we hope you’ll give a thought to the men and women who’ve made it possible for you to participate in this cornerstone of our democracy — the men and women of our armed forces. They’re scattered across our globe, ensuring that all of us can enjoy this remarkable privilege.

Please keep them and their families in your prayers.

Go green, be cynical and trust no one

Special Notice: Palm Beach County, Florida, will, once again, not disappoint America; they will get it wrong on Election Day. That’s why an army of attorneys is headed that way.

I’m surviving this national money crisis better than some of my friends. Looking over my portfolio, I realize I didn’t have much going in. I can’t lose much going out. That’s how life is with the little people. Millionaires, on the other hand, are toast. If this keeps up, there’ll be no wealthy folks left for Obama to tax. Now that’s funny.

Lots of rich Republicans are grumpy because their candidate is losing in the polls and they’re broke. The Democratic Congress, with the help of Republicans, created this mess. Is that funny, or what? Hmmm, maybe not.

I think the only thing that can save Republicans from Obama is the “Bubba Factor.” The “Bubba Factor” might kick in on election day when every racist, red neck and good ole boy in America shows up unexpectedly and votes for McCain, the good ole white boy. Don’t laugh “cause Republicans are counting on it. It’s sooo good to be an Independent.

I watched a group of angry supporters boo McCain at this son political rally because he defended Obama, calling him a “nice and decent man.” He told supporters not to be afraid because Obama is not an Arab. Could I make this up? Does Obama look like a camel rider? The more he defended Obama, the louder the booing. Is McCain nuts? Doesn’t he know he can’t win by being honest? He’s much too dastly to be our president.

Hey, if Obama were an Arab, it could be a good thing. I know Hamas and Hezbollah are rooting for him. Plus, Arabs have cheap gas and Obama could say, “Yes we can have came in every carport.” Also the Malia term “go to the mats” would have a fun new meaning.

So I’m adjusting to less money and the shortcomings of both candidates. One is too kind and respectful to win this cutthroat race and the other is a rookie who dazzled America with his bull s...oops, silver tongue.

None of this matters anyway because your vote is meaningless. Wanna get sick? Bone up on the operation of the Electoral College, its origin and function. These clowns are all powerful and do as they please. The number of electoral votes each state gets is based on population and their representation in Congress. Since everyone moves every Friday night, how do they keep track? They don’t. Can anyone tell me how many people are moving in and out of Florida on any given weekend? Circus music, please.

Are you depressed yet? No, well read on.

Fraudulent voter registration is raging in America. Currently, there’s more people registered to vote in Philadelphia than there are persons living there. Hmmm, could something be amiss? Ask me if I’ve lost faith in our voting system.

One clown registered as a Democrat 74 times for money and cigarettes. I think this happened to Rome when it began to crumble. These are not crimes against McCain or Obama; these are crimes against democracy, what’s left of it.

If your president were elected by popular vote, fraudulent voter registration wouldn’t matter. First, using my KISS system, I would dump early voting to further eliminate cheating. Next, a voter would walk into a polling place, stick his left index finger into a large jar of bright green indelible ink. (Sound familiar?) He votes...he’s done. He can’t vote again for 48 hours because the indelible ink won’t wash off. Will anyone scrape off three layers of skin to vote again for money and cigarettes? That really hurts!

Who cares if he has 74 voter registration cards? Who cares if he registered as Mickey Mouse?/Oneperson...one vote...one green finger, DUH!

One last thing. Fire all volunteer poll workers. These downs are nothing more than voters who are rooting for a particular candidate. Who annoyed them honest and kept of the votes? Bite the bullet and hire professional bonded companies to run polls. Trust no one. Hellooooo, no trust no one. Hire an off-duty Republican policewoman and an off-duty Democratic firefighter to stand watch together at each precinct to make sure everyone sticks their finger into the green ink well. Oh well, maybe in 2012.

Wait, does green ink show up on black skin? Ha, no problem. It’s just like going to Chucky Cheese or searching for somen, it all glows under a black light.
I don't know if you ever had that dream in which you're falling through space? Maybe it's just because I had it so often as a kid that I assume everyone else had it at least once. I always woke up before I hit the ground. Older boys at school, who seemed to know, said that if you didn't wake up before you hit, you would die. Maybe I don't know. I never proved it one way or the other.

I hadn't had the dream for years, decades really, until the other night. I was driving Lizzie's car, a big stable four wheel drive model. Bull was in the seat beside me. I don't know where we had been. Skiing, maybe, because it was cold and icy. I guess we were headed home, but I don't know that for sure either. It doesn't matter and that often how it is with dreams. I guess they have to start somewhere. We were having a good time, talking and laughing. Then we were on ice, just like that, a gigantic sheet of ice. There was a hill to our right and a cliff to our left. We skidded toward the hill. "Take it easy," I told myself. "Don't over correct or you'll be into the hill."

Considering how things turned out, that would have been a good idea. But I loosened my grip on the wheel, turned ever so slightly to the left and the car straightened. It drifted a little to the left, toward the cliff, but just a little. A tiny tug to the right and we were going straight again, over an endless sheet of ice. I didn't want to brake, fearing another skid. We were going faster than I wanted, but it was OK, until I saw that the road turned sharply to the left just ahead of us. For some reason I didn't even try to turn. The car seemed to accelerate, but my foot was not on the gas pedal. We broke through a guard rail and plunged into space.

The car didn't start to fall immediately, but sort of hung in space, as if we were in zero gravity, but, of course I knew that we were both going to die, and that my son's death was my fault. I turned to where Bull had been, wanting to hug him tightly for our last few seconds of life. But he was not in his seat. He had somehow been thrown from the car and was floating next to it. He was in a sitting position, just as he were still in his seat, but of course he wasn't. He looked calm, as if he hadn't yet realized our peril. I wanted to comfort him. The thousands of times, in the past 12 years that I had told him I love him, meant nothing. I shouted as loudly as I could, "I love you Bull, and I'm sorry." He couldn't hear me. He sat quietly as if he were a jet pilot who had ejected, but not yet separated from his seat. He hadn't heard me. He looked for room, still somewhat unnerved myself, sat on his bed and hugged him. "Dad," he sobbed. "We were falling and I couldn't hear you." I went cold. Then he added, "What does it mean?" I had no idea what it meant, and I wasn't about to lie or to tell him that we had shared the same dream. Maybe sometime, in years to come, but not tonight, not with a sick feeling in my belly and fear in my heart. "I have no idea, Little Buddy. Go back to sleep. It's just a dream. I love you." He pulled away. Tears streamed down his face. Terror shown in his eyes, mixed with dread and confusion. Through the tears he managed to say, "I still can't hear you, Dad."

to say Tuesday's snow was a rare thing.”

A cold winter means snow in the mountains and according to the Almanac precipitation-wise, most of the South, is supposed to experience above-normal conditions with above-normal precipitation predicted in January and February 2009 with wet and snowy conditions for the Northeast and Mid-Atlantic states.

Considered the oldest continuously published periodical in the U.S., since 1792, the Almanac has been using a combination of local folklore and a secret scientific formula to produce long-range forecasts and claims an accuracy rating near 80%.

It is predicting the coldest temperatures in early and mid-December, early and late January, and early and mid-February.

But even the Almanac didn't predict Highlands' Oct. 28 snowfall only saying that it would be cool and rainy that week. It does say there will be snow in time for Thanksgiving, though, with the biggest snowstorm in early January, with frequent snowfall and cold weather through March.

Old-timers around Highlands claim the acorns fell profusely and early this year which means a cold hard winter, something not seen in these parts for several years.

Other local lore involves fogs in August, when katydids first chipped, much about wooly worms and more.

The woolly worm indicates a hard winter if they have heavy, hairy coats, if there are lots of them seen crawling around, if they're moving unusually slowly before the first frost and if their black bands are wider than the rust-orange band separating them which is definitely the case this year, according to those who watch such things.

Weather lore says there will be as many snowfalls during winter as there were fogs in August.

Also, the winter will be cold and hard if animals have thicker coats of hair or fur; if squirrels build their nests low in trees and gather nuts early; if ants build their mounds high; if there are more spiderwebs than usual in the fall; if a heavy crop of berries are found on holly and dogwood trees; if birds are seen migrating early or huddling on the ground; if there is lots of rolling thunder during late fall; if leaves shed before changing color; if chimneys smoke toward the ground; and if the breastbone of a turkey cooked in the fall is purple or dark blue. If it is white, a mild winter is in store.

There is also winter weather lore concerning the persimmon.

After a fall frost, cut into the seed of a persimmon from the narrow side, and look at the kernel. See if it looks like a spoon, fork, or knife.

If the kernel is shaped like a spoon, winter will be harsh with heavy, wet snow; if it looks like a fork, winter will be mild with light powder snow and if it looks like a knife, winter will be cold, icy with cutting winds.

The only thing people in Highlands know for sure is its weather is a fickle thing best taken a day at a time.

1. What do you want the public to know about you concerning your credential to run for a seat on the Macon County Board of Commissioners?

I have run a successful small business in Macon County for 14 years; I have been involved in and around local government for more than 10 years; I served on the Macon County planning board for 3 years; I understand how to work with people – debate, compromise, solve problems; I got involved in Macon County politics because I wanted to find a way to get as many people involved as I could.

2. Exactly what sets you apart from the other candidates?

Two issues that I think we disagree on for the future of Macon County are schools and planning.

First, I want to say I fully support public schools. I am from a family of four children. I was the only child that graduated high school. So I am a product of public schools.

I think we can save our community schools. I also believe that the children of Macon County are better served in a community school. I have visited schools in Macon County and I have a plan to save the community schools. I believe in the hard working honest people in Macon County and I also believe that if you are up front and honest with them they will do the right thing.

If elected I pledge to:
- Respect every single person's opinion;
- Involve the Public more;
- Allow additional public input at public meetings;
- Propose informal emails & e-votes on issues for a quick public response and voice;
- Web-broadcast public meetings;
- Research every issue; find sources and solutions;
- Propose monthly radio shows or newspaper (i.e. commissioners corner) to let citizens know more about what is going on.

2. Exactly what sets you apart from the other candidates?

Two issues that I think we disagree on for the future of Macon County are schools and planning.

First, I believe my leadership experience and my experience with governmental budgets gives me the ability to "ask the hard questions" and "make the tough calls". We are facing uncertain economic times today, and I believe it is essential that we look forward and evaluate carefully our spending plans and stand ready to ask those questions and make those decisions. Second, I am deeply invested in Macon County and its citizens. I work with and teach the youth of Macon County everyday. I serve on the Board of Directors of the Burmingtown Iota Fire department and am an active member and officer of the Snow Hill United Methodist Church. I believe that a County Commissioner should have close ties to the county and its people so that their interests can be better served. I strongly support our public schools and will work hard to ensure that we have the infrastructure necessary to give our children the best education that we can. Finally, I believe that open communication between the Board of Commissioners and the people of Macon County is an essential aspect of a representative form of government and can and should be improved.

The difference is that I don’t believe that the people of Macon County want to listen to their commissioners talk; I think that the people want their County Commissioners to listen more to the people! There

They thought this was a costume... but I’m the real thing!

...to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. That, to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

In our Declaration of Independence, Thomas Jefferson, as brilliant as he was, probably didn’t foresee the time when the governed, that’s us, would willingly give up our Liberty. He followed the abovewith, “That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive to these ends, it is the right of the people alter or to abolish it…” Evidently he assumed that the people would rebel before giving up their Liberty. Evidently he further assumed that the governed would know it before it was lost.

If the worst happens next Tuesday, and Obama is elected with a filibuster-proof Congress, your liberty and mine will be greatly diminished. Is this just the ravings of a hopeless old man? Maybe. However, it is based on some rather amazing admissions that many of us have chosen to ignore. On September 7, 2008, Barack Obama said to George Stephanopoulos on ABC’s This Week, “my Muslim faith.” Obama didn’t correct himself, Stephanopoulos had to tell him, “you mean Christian faith.” Assuming you are a Christian, can you imagine yourself telling someone about your Muslim faith? Where would that come from?

I don’t know if Obama’s remark in Oregon in May 2008 that he had campaigned in "57 states" is meaningful or not. The fact that the Organization of the Islamic Conference has 57 member states may have been on his mind at the time. I don’t know. I don’t know if it is significant or not to his political thinking that he carried and assumedly read “The Post-American World” written by an India born Muslim.

I don’t know who is dumber, Obama for picking Biden, or Biden for making his remarks in the final stage of their campaign, in which they are leading. Joe is in Seattle at the home of one of those filthy "wealthiest Americans", when he made the following statement. "Mark my words. Within the next, first six months of this administration, if we win, they’re going to – we’re going to face a major international challenge. Because they’re going to want to test him, just like they did young John Kennedy.

They’re going to want to test him. Watch, we’re going to have an international crisis, a generated crisis, to test them. This guy. And he’s gonna have to make some really tough – I don’t know what the decision’s gonna be, but I promise you it will occur.”

Do you really want to elect a guy whose running mate says, if elected, is certain to precipitate an “international challenge.” Do you want to see an international challenge with a totally untested Commander-in-Chief? A president who will wave a white flag in Iraq, one who will sit down a talk with any world leader without preconditions? Do you think Obama can outlie Putin or Ahmadinejad?

Would America come out ahead in any such conversation? That’s like thinking that Bush was going to bring peace to the Middle East. It ain’t going to happen.

And then there is Obama’s now famous statement to Joe the Plumber that we need to spread the wealth. Well, I don’t think my wealth needs be spread, as paltry as it is, and I don’t think your wealth needs be spread anymore than it already is, through multitudinous forms of existing taxation. Recently, parts of Obama’s plans for obtaining more of your money have been disclosed. Taxing retirement funds is one. Eliminating the tax deductibility of contributions to retirement plans is another.

Freedom can be lost in many ways, and with it, the pursuit of happiness. One way is through taxation. When the government spends more of your money than you do, your freedom has been diminished. When a coach can’t lead his team in a pre-game prayer, their freedom has been diminished. When the vote to allow a labor union to organize is no longer done in secret, that freedom has been diminished.

When a Pastor doesn’t direct his flock based on scripture for fear of losing his church’s tax-exempt status, that freedom is lost. When the “fairness doctrine” is back on the table, possibly to be passed, everybody’s right to free speech is in jeopardy. Socialism is on the horizon, and this means a lack of freedom for all of us, and with it, the pursuit of happiness. Think about it when you vote.

are 15 precincts in Macon County and 5 commissioners. If each commissioner went to a different precinct once each month, we could visit each precinct four times a year! These meetings would happen in the community centers of the county and would allow citizens to have unhindered access to their elected officials. If I am fortunate enough to be elected, I will try to get the other commissioners to implement this plan, but if they don’t agree, I will still make every effort to reach out to my constituents to find out what they need and want from their county government.

3. Please tell us a little about your vision for the future of Macon County and how you will help that vision come to fruition.

Growing up in Macon County was a terrific experience for me and living here as an adult is even better. Still with the remarkable growth the county has experienced, we face many challenges with respect to infrastructure, schools, environmental concerns and others. My vision for Macon County is to create an economically prosperous county with an outstanding education system, that protects and enhances the natural beauty that has attracted so many to our area. This will require a county government that addresses the needs of people across a demographic spectrum to maximize the quality of life for all Maconians.

It will require the vision of a comprehensive long range plan to keep us on track and ensure the most efficient use of the taxpayer’s dollars. To achieve this vision, we must throw off the bonds of partisan politics and agendas and embrace the idea that in order to fully reap the benefit of a bright future, we must ensure that we bring all of our citizens with us. We must put less emphasis on Democrat and Republican and the ideologies that divide us and we must seek to emphasize the thing that unites us – the well being of Macon County’s citizens. If I am fortunate enough to win this election, I will work as hard as I can to represent all my constituents, not just those that happened to vote for me. All governments work best when we work together and take care of one another. If you honor me by electing me as your commissioner, I will not forget where I was raised or who I represent.

1. What do you want the public to know about you concerning your credentials to run for a seat on the Macon County Board of Education board?

My formal education includes the following: graduation from Highlands School in 1965, major in social sciences from WCU and advanced hours in special needs, economics and reading from Clemson. 34 years of teaching included 5th grade in Clay County, 8 years in middle school in SC, 3 years in alternative education and 21 years as a social studies teacher in Highlands. My years in alternative education with students from 7th grade to adult made me aware of how much technology must be used today’s classroom. I took various levels of courses to increase my ability to utilize the tools now available. Peer evaluation certification made it possible for me to serve as a teacher evaluator for administration. As a certified writing consultant for SC, I was involved in workshops and teacher instruction. Board members must have the ability to make team decisions, to conduct research, reach conclusions based on rules and facts and to apply all practices fairly and openly. Development and implementation of these skills is important to an educator and should translate well into board membership.

2. Exactly what sets you apart from the other candidates?

Due to my various teaching positions in schools ranging in size from 75 to 1200 students, I understand the challenges of meeting the needs of elementary, middle, high school and adult students. As a retired educator, I have the time and willingness to do what is needed as a member of the board. The future of Macon County schools depends upon short and long term planning. I have experience in developing programs and courses that would help within the board setting. Children have been a part of my life for a long time. I would appreciate getting to work for them in this new level of board membership.

3. Please tell us a little about your vision for the future of Macon County Schools and how you will help that vision come to fruition.

Macon County schools serve about 4500 students. This provides an opportunity to become the top school system in the state if we employ everything that we can from research and experience. I would try to help within the board setting. Children have been a part of my life for a long time. I would appreciate getting to work for them in this new level of board membership.
COOKING ON THE PLATEAU

Small Plates Are Big
Entertaining with the big trend of small plate dining

Small plates are transforming the way we eat. Across the country, from restaurants to homes, exciting menus of diverse small plates are being served instead of old-school one-plate entrees.

Perfect for parties where conversation is key, small plates make the usual cocktail party into something festive and a delightful treat of many tastes. More than appetizers but less than a full-on buffet, small plate food is the sizzling hot new food trend you can try without busting the budget.

Think tapas, American style — Burgers go mini to become stylish sliders. Salad wedges and shots of soup transform favorite fall classics into snazzy utensil-free finger foods. Add an exotic touch with mini-quesadillas, shrimp skewers or lamb lollipops.

Add panache on the beverage side by pairing your small plates with premium wine.

Sizzling Mini-Sliders
Serves 4
Time: 30 minutes
1 teaspoon onion powder
2 teaspoons minced garlic
1/2 cup Boho Vineyards Cabernet
1/2 pounds ground chuck
1/2 teaspoon ground black pepper
1/2 teaspoon kosher salt
12 3-inch dinner rolls
Condiments: Caramelized onions
(sauté in olive oil, very slowly, about 20 minutes)
1/2 cup loosely packed watercress
1/2 cup thinly shredded radicchio

In medium bowl, combine onion powder, garlic, wine, beef, salt and pepper. Shape into twelve 1/2-inch-thick patties. Grill until browned, 3 to 4 minutes per side. Grill dinner rolls until slightly toasted. On bottom of each roll, place caramelized onions, patty, watercress and radicchio. Top with roll top. Pairing Suggestion: Boho Vineyards Cabernet Sauvignon

Mint Pesto Lamb Lollipops
Serves 6
Time: less than 30 minutes
1 clove minced garlic
1/4 cup minced fresh mint
2 tablespoons ground pine nuts
1/2 teaspoon ground cumin
2 tablespoons Parmesan cheese
2 tablespoons olive oil
1/3 cup Pinot Evil Pinot Noir
12 small lamb chops or lamb riblets, Frenched and trimmed
2 tablespoons olive oil
Salt and pepper to taste

Combine first six ingredients in food processor until a paste forms. Set aside.

In medium bowl, combine onion powder, garlic, wine, beef, salt and pepper. Shape into twelve 1/2-inch-thick patties. Grill until browned, 3 to 4 minutes per side. College and Western Carolina University. In my community, I have been president of the PTO and involved with the school. I am an active member of my church and in the community. I have coached both high school and youth league basketball for a total of 32 years. I take kids to the Crossfire Christian basketball camps as well as on camping trips. I support the students in our community by attending their ball games and other school functions, by buying whatever they are selling, and looking out for their educational well-being. As a current member of the BOE, I was also involved in the early set up of New Century Scholars where the Macon County BOE gave money to begin the program.

2. Exactly what sets you apart from the other candidates?

The youth of Macon County have always been in my heart and because they are dear to my heart, I have been very involved in making sure that they get the very best they can be and assuring them they can accomplish anything they desire. I am involved with our school youth and our church youth. The thing that sets me apart from the others is that my decisions have always and will continue to come from my heart and what is in my best interest. The best interest of the students has been the basis for my decisions. I am also motivated by my belief that the community should have a voice in the development of the policies that govern our schools. These policies must be in the best interests of students and everyone’s voice must be heard without fear of reprisal. It is my desire that all students are successful and I will help ensure their success as a member of the BOE.

3. Please tell us a little about your vision for the future of Macon County and how you will help that vision come to fruition.

The future of Macon County is in our schools. Our students are our future. I believe that we should educate each student to their full potential, as well as instill in them character values. Our students need to be prepared for the 21st century in order to be successful. I will be sure that our school system is up to date and able to prepare our students for the future. In these difficult economic times we must be very considerate of how we use our educational dollars. The taxpayers expect it and we owe it to our children to provide them with the best education possible. We need to develop young men and women who possess high standards, good character, and have good work ethics.

We must continue the progress that we have made with regard to technology in education. The 21st Century will require these skills. We must also continue actively pursue grants and other alternative funding sources so that none of our academic or extracurricular programs are cut. Our budget must also continue to have a level of transparency that allows the community to see exactly how their tax dollars are being spent.

Macon County students are our future. I believe in our students and that today’s preparation and education for them will ensure Macon County will continue to set the example for the state and nation. Join with me in doing all we can for our students of today and the future of tomorrow to prepare them for the 21st century.

1. What do you want the public to know about you concerning your credentials to run for a seat on the BOE?

I was elected to the Macon County Board of Education in 1996 and served to 2000 representing District III, the Nantahala Community. I own and operate my own excavation business. I have been involved with the Nantahala Fire and Rescue for 17 years and have had the honor of being chief for 12 years. These experiences have provided many, important decision making opportunities that will be beneficial to this position.

2. Exactly what sets you apart from the other candidates?

My wife being an Exceptional Children’s Teacher for 16 years and my son being a junior in high school motivates me to pursue 21st century policies that will allow our young people to be competitive when furthering their education or moving into the working world. As a board member, I will help ensure their success as a member of the BOE.

3. Please tell us a little about your vision for the future of Macon County and how you will help that vision come to fruition.

Board members have to be “visionaries” with a mission. My vision for Macon County is as follows: “Every public school student will graduate from high school, be globally competitive for work and postsecondary education, and be prepared for life in the 21st century.” To be globally competitive, resources have to be sought to continue “connecting” our students to the working world. Technology is a learning tool and if not used, we will move back into the 20th century. I will support technology and other resources to ensure that this vision is carried through.

The Honeymoon, Part V

Michelle Mead-Armor &
John Armor

Under overcast skies, we left our hotel in Lettermen, and headed south past the Blue Stack Mountains. We drove through the town of Donegal, and followed the Atlantic coastline of Donegal Bay to Belleek, where we stopped to visit the Belleek Pottery Factory. We were in for a real treat, first watching a film to see how skilled craftsmen form and decorate delicate porcelain masterpieces, and then wandering around the factory gift shop to pick up some wonderful pottery to take home. A note to visitors—Belleek does not sell “factory seconds”—each item is perfect, or they destroy it! Belleek even has a nice tea room where you can recover as you credit card cools enough to put back in your wallet.

After our factory tour, we continued our journey south through County Sligo and the windswept landscape of County Mayo through the heathy mountains of the Connemara region. Our bus pulled into the Connemara Coast Hotel in Galway, and we were delighted to have another two night stay.

The next morning was rainy and miserable—just what we didn’t need for our planned trip to the Aran Islands. Several of our group bailed out, deciding not to risk a rough crossing and opting to spend the day visiting Galway instead. We drove to the pier with a sense of foreboding, hoping we’d made the right decision. The crossing from Rosseaval to Aran Mor (the largest of the three islands) was very choppy and rough; fortunately, Mam and Maman, John and I are all pretty good sailors. The Aran Islands are 30 miles west of Galway City. We had a great local guide, who took us around the island by minibus, giving us an overview of the island with the most delightful, musical Irish lilt. Most of the islanders speak Irish, and still retain many of the traditional ways of farming and fishing. The land is extremely stony, and the islanders have formed dry stone walls to protect the windswept fields. Seaweed is used to make the land more fertile. Our guide took us to Dun Aengus, a vast fortification perched on the side of a cliff that falls to the Atlantic Ocean 300 feet below. The site consists of three concentric enclosures and dates back to 1,000 BC or earlier. A small museum on the site gives excellent information about the area.

We couldn’t wait to see the famous hand-knit Aran sweaters. The original reason for their distinctive patterns is the oil-washed wool, which stays warm when wet. All three of us found great sweaters—we can’t wait for the weather to get cool enough to show them off. Fortunately for us, the weather cleared up more and more during the day. By the time we took the boat back to Rosseval, we were able to sit on the top deck, not cowering inside the way we had on the trip over. There were smiles all around, and lots and lots of sweaters in shopping bags.

The next day, we left Galway for the center of Ireland, and a visit to Clonmacnoise. This monastic settlement was founded in 545 AD by St. Ciaran, and is set on the banks of the River Shannon. We learned about the history of the site through an audiovisual presentation, and checked out an amazing collection of Celtic Crosses, brought indoors to protect them from inclement weather. Several small stone buildings still exist, without their roofs, alas. It’s a lovely and impressive area to walk around.

Our last leg of the trip took us across the rolling pastures of Ireland’s heartland to the village of Dunboyne. We checked into our hotel— the fabulous Dunboyne Castle Hotel— and prepared to be spoiled. What a place! The original part of the hotel is a magnificent 18th-century mansion, once the home of the Lord of Dunboyne, a gentleman with an interesting story. John Butler was the Roman Catholic Bishop of Cork when the previous peer died. Butler appealed to the Pope, asking for a dispensation from his vow of celibacy so that he could marry and presumably father an heir. This would keep the peerage in the direct line of this ancient house. Well, the Pope said “no,” and Lord Dunboyne became a Protestant. He and a pretty young distant cousin married, but their young son died, and the line died out. The story goes that John Butler was driving along a country road one day, and a distraught woman rushed out of a cottage, calling for a priest for the dangerously ill person inside. Butler is said to have said “I am a priest,” and rushing inside, heard the confession of the dying person. His will was disputed by his sister, on the grounds that, having reconverted to Catholicism, he was not capable of making a will.

After a brief walk around Dunboyne, we had a tasty dinner, followed by an evening of traditional Irish music in the Cellar Bar. It was a great way to end what had been an exceptional trip.

In spite of somewhat f fty weather, we enjoyed ourselves enormously on our trip. I was delighted to see Scotland again, and even more pleased to be able to share it with John and Maman. Perhaps more importantly, in seeing Northern Ireland, John and I were able to see the country where our ancestors came from. Our brief stay there only made us want a longer visit, hopefully one of those fly-drive ones so we can explore certain areas in more depth. It’s good to see that Scotland isn’t all about bagpipes and haggis, and that Ireland is more than peat bogs and potatoes. It’s true that travel broadens the mind, and in our case, it took a pretty good hit at our waistlines, too. We have our Aran Island sweaters; some Belleek pottery; great tweeds, and a new red pepper oatmeal. Not bad for ten days in Ireland, huh?

I have found it very interesting over the last couple of months that, in the midst of a global financial crisis, when banks are supposedly refusing to make loans, I am still receiving credit card offers in the mail for zero percent balance transfers. I have gotten plenty of them in the last few months, and most interesting of all, three — three! — from Washington Mutual, the large savings and loan that went broke last month.

Of course this economic crisis has many causes; I have written about some already. A major contributor in my opinion is the culture of consumption that has taken over this country, and I find this the factor people are least willing to talk about.

In a column earlier this year ("Our Country's Future," March 13), I discussed the statistic that 2.7% of all consumer spending was from home equity loans. Americans used to save a hefty percentage of their salaries — an average of over 8% in the years 1959-1990; now the average American savings rate is negative. We spend more than we make.

I have felt in my gut for a couple of years now that a day of reckoning was coming because it was obvious to me that this spending spree could not be sustained. How could an economy based on debt keep going on forever? Yet most economists and politicians didn’t see any problem with it.

I am reading a new book called The Limits of Power: The End of American Exceptionalism by Andrew Bacevich (320.973B), and was struck by Mr. Bacevich’s assertion that a major pivot point in modern American history happened in July 1979. I couldn’t remember anything of major significance happening that month, and was surprised to read he was referring to a speech by President Jimmy Carter.

That summer was not a good time in America. The Iranian revolutionaries had taken the hostages earlier that year, the price of gas had shot up again, inflation was 11 percent, unemployment was 7 percent, and interest rates were at the double digits.

President Carter gave a speech on July 15 to the nation. He said that Americans were “experiencing a crisis of confidence, a crisis that strikes at the very heart and soul and spirit of our national will.” He diagnosed the cause of this crisis: “too many of us now tend to worship self-indulgence and consumption. Human identity is no longer defined by what one does, but by what one owns. But we’ve discovered that owning things and consuming things does not satisfy our longing for meaning. We’ve learned that piling up material goods cannot fill the emptiness of lives which have no confidence or purpose.”

He concluded, “There are two paths to choose. One is a path I’ve warned about tonight, the path that leads to fragmentation and self-interest. Down that road lies a mistaken idea of freedom, the right to grasp for oneself all possible advantage over others.” The other path was “the path of common purpose and the restoration of American values.”

Carter believed that “energy will be the immediate test of our ability to unite this nation, and it can also be the standard around which we rally.” He called for, among other things, developing alternative energy sources and conservation of energy by carpooling and turning down the thermostat. He expressed confidence that by carpooling and turning down the thermostat. He expressed confidence that one day America could achieve energy independence, but in the meantime “there was simply no way to avoid sacrifices.”

This was labeled the “malaise speech” and was used by Carter’s opponent in the next year’s presidential race against him (if you’d like to read the whole speech, just google “carter malaise speech.”)

Ronald Reagan’s slogan in 1980 was “Morning in America.” Reagan’s theme was the opposite of what Carter spoke of in that “malaise” speech: we’re Americans, the most powerful country in the world, and we can have it all. There’s no need for sacrifice. Bacevich calls him the “modern prophet of profligacy, the politician who gave moral sanction to the empire of consumption.” Bacevich quotes Reagan, “When it comes to energy, he was insistent: ‘We must decide that less is not enough.’

The American people obviously chose consumption over sacrifice, the path of easy-living-now over investment in our collective future. I think Carter was a poor salesman, but he was Z1 at the time of his speech and I understand what he was talking about. I was excited at the prospect of defining a new American purpose and the development of alternative energy. It was obvious to me even back then how vital this was to our future, and I was crushed at the shortsightedness of the American people when Reagan won the election.

The main body of Bacevich’s book is the documentation of the next 30 years in which America has “wielded U.S. military power to ensure access to oil, hoping thereby to prolong the empire of consumption.” By dominating the planet and claiming “American Exceptionalism,” we have maintained our increasingly unrealistic, glittering lifestyles at great cost to the planet’s and our nation’s health.

for a seat on the Macon County Board of Education?

What do you want the public to know about you concerning your credentials to run for a seat on the BOE?

What sets you apart from the other candidates?

What sets you apart from the other candidates is that I have a degree in Education from Appalachian State University. I believe in open and honest communication, government, and working relationships. This means that people can "tell it like it is" without fear of retribution. This stimulates critical creative thinking, resulting in better ideas for the good of the school system.

The classroom (teacher, assistant, supplies, technology), and student is the focal point of the education system. This is where the product is produced—the expected results are obtained. Classrooms must not be shortchanged. Minimize, to the greatest extent possible, mandated distractions that take time away from the classroom. I believe in open and honest communication, government, and working relationships. This means that people can "tell it like it is" without fear of retribution. This stimulates critical creative thinking, resulting in better ideas for the good of the school system.

All too often in the public school sector, if we don’t agree with the message, we shoot the messenger. One should not have to sacrifice free speech for fear of retribution. We all learn more from our critics than we do from our fans.

I believe in open and honest communication, government, and working relationships. This means that people can "tell it like it is" without fear of retribution. This stimulates critical creative thinking, resulting in better ideas for the good of the school system.

A forelorn cabin with a ‘spooky’ story

By Barbara Lawrence
Owner of Mountain Rarities

The Joe Webb log cabin stood alone, looking unloved and abandoned, hidden by tall Mountain Laurel bushes that bloomed profusely in the summer. While Highlands carried out its busy life, it seemed that time stood still for the old house. The rumor was that an old musician had lived there and hung himself by his violin string. Music was said to be heard coming from the house occasionally.

When the police were called, they reported everything was in order but the wooden beams were unstable so people should stay away.

I walked my dogs by the house every morning. Neighbors had told me to stay away. “It’s haunted and dangerous” they said. Noises had been heard in the night, and lights had been seen once or twice. I didn’t believe in such nonsense, so I enjoyed my walk and always thought what a nice home it would make if it were fixed up. Besides, I could take my dogs off their leash, so they could enjoy sniffing through the long grass and flushing out the occasional rabbit.

One morning I was surprised to notice that the curtains had been moved, ever so slightly. “That’s strange!” I thought, maybe someone came by to give the place a clean. The next morning they were back in the usual position. “Must be my imagination” I thought.

About a week later, I noticed a little vase in the window had been moved. Now I was beginning to wonder if my friends were right. Maybe this place was haunted – maybe I should change my route in the morning. I decided to take my last walk to the house the next morning, and then take a detour by the lake. I had avoided this in the past because my dogs loved to chase the ducks.

As I came around the Mountain Laurel bush I stopped in surprise. Coming out of the house was someone I knew and was very close to years ago, one could say in another life when I worked for the government. I nodded to him. He smiled and nodded back. I understood then what the house was. For the next week I walked by the lake, and my dogs suffered the indignation of being on a leash.

One morning I decided to go by the house again. I wanted to take one last look. That encounter had sure brought back memories.

To my amazement, the doors were open; cleaners were busy washing floors and windows. A new For Sale Sign was up. A young couple was looking at the house.

They came over to me. “We are thinking of buying this house. The owner, Mr. Usam, just put it on the market last week. It’s a great price, and really cozy, it looks as if it has been well cared for inside, but people told us this house had a reputation of being haunted and dangerous.” What do you think?

“Oh! I can assure you, this has always been a very “safe” house…..”
Confession time

O k, so every so often I use this space as a personal confession booth, where I spill out some of the deepest and darkest things that keep me awake at night. (or during the day, depending on how you look at these things).

Tonight, I had an epiphany as I was sitting at home. I was supposed to be working, either on this column, or a homework assignment, or some lesson plans, or laundry, or some of the other 10 million things that needed to be done. As I was thinking, I was holding a PlayStation controller in my hand and had just finished throwing for 340 yards with 5 touchdowns. It was then that I realized that I have a problem, and it manifests itself in the video game world.

To fully explain what I am talking about, I'll have to take you back to my childhood. It was a time of social awkwardness, etc., but it was also the dawn of modern video games. These video games allowed one to escape reality and enter a virtual world full of all kinds of fun. It was also the dawn of the first sports games, with RBI baseball (which allowed the pitcher to magically move the ball back and forth defying all laws of gravity), Tecmo Bowl (which featured a 4-play playbook similar to the Ten- nessee Volunteers actual playbook) and Double Dribble (which allowed players to dunk from behind the 3-point line on the baseline).

All of these games were extremely generic, not even featuring real teams or real players (except Tecmo Bowl, which featured a cyborg version of Bo Jackson), but they did allow gamers to get their first taste of virtual sports.

However, as the games advanced, so did the realism that they provided. Soon, gamers could take control of their favorite players or favorite teams and play to their hearts' content. At this point, you may be asking yourself about this supposed confession, which I promise I will be getting to eventually. However, I must outline one other advancement within the newest sports games—the Create-a-Player feature. This feature allows gamers to create themselves, or any other player they would like to see in the game. And here now, in this particular column, I am going to confess I abuse the Create-a-Player system.

The pattern of abuse started with my Sega Dreamcast, and the ability to create myself in College Football. Soon, I was a 6’8” quarterbacking monster with a rocket arm and 4.4 speed that would make Reggie Bush look slow.

Next came MLB baseball, where my 96 mph fastball was almost as dominant as my knee-buckling curveball.

College basketball was next, where my supreme handles and deadly 3-point shooting made me the best white player with glasses since George Mikan. And lest you think that at some point I got over this sick manipulation of the Create-a-Player system, last night I just won my third BCS championship, as captain and quarterback of the Duke Blue Devils.

At this point, I feel like I have a problem — one that can only be solved with a lot of therapy, and perhaps even a life. Of course, the first step to recovery is admitting you have a problem… right? Now, if you will excuse me, I have to start game 7 for the Pirates in the World Series in a few minutes.

‘Bobby Jones’ tournament nets $130,000 for hospital

2008 marked the 27th Annual Bob Jones Invitational Golf Tournament hosted by Highlands Country Club and played for benefit of the Highlands-Cashiers Hospital Foundation. This year’s tournament played on Aug. 16 generated $130,000 for the hospital.

Played in honor of immortal golfer Bobby Jones, the invitational featured Walker Cup players. Every two years, the best amateur golfers in the United States compete with those from Great Britain and Ireland in team play for the coveted Walker Cup, with play alternating between here and overseas. It all began in 1922, when the first match was played in this country. In an effort to get international play started, George Herbert Walker, a prominent golfer of the time, donated an “International Challenge Trophy”. The press termed the trophy the “Walker Cup” in honor of the donor, who happened to be former President George Bush’s maternal grandfather, and President George W. Bush’s great-grandfather. Bobby Jones was selected to play on five Walker Cup teams and chosen twice to serve as team captain. In nine individual matches, he was undefeated.

The Bob Jones Tournament Committee is comprised of Earle Mauldin, Chairman, Wayne Bedner, Anne Bailey, Bill Gaston, Allen Hardin, John Midgett, Jr., Helen Olnick, Ruthie Watts and Club Administrator Martha Betz. Proceeds to the hospital foundation exceed $28 million.
As you read this there are just four days before the election. What's left to be said? Each candidate has made his or her point; they have bombarded us with ads to the point where we can recite the rhetoric with the sound turned down on the TV. As we come to the close of the campaign, it and the ads have turned extremely negative. The campaign has come to the point where it's become distasteful even to watch. I personally have had my fill of it. I've never liked nor respected those that try to make themselves look better by making other look worse. In election campaigns, I want to hear what the candidate has done and intends to do, not just a ranting why the other candidate is an idiot.

So now the end is near and I have wondered how, at this point, people could be uncertain for whom they were going to vote; certainly the data is available on every candidate's position on every issue if you want it. Since I have been writing this column I have received a lot of feedback, and from their comments I know that some people will never vote beyond their party affiliation no matter who is their candidate — that's just the way they are. So I asked myself, who are the undecided? I wondered if they were those that truly couldn't decide between the candidates and then I thought how could they not? McCain and Obama are as different as two candidates can be. This isn't a case of deciding between desserts you love, or two colors for your new car, these two candidates are polar opposites. Can the undecided be that uninformed?

I have had a thought recently that perhaps some of the undecided are not ill informed at all, but are struggling to make a change in their voting party of which they have never done before nor would have ever considered doing before. I have a dear friend who is at the total opposite of the political spectrum as me. We have discussed politics for a long time, and although our goals for America are the same — a strong, self reliant, free society where business thrives — our method of getting there are very different. The thought of this lifelong Republican voting for Obama was a foreign to him as me not rooting for my Phillies. We disagree on the Patriot Act, aid to those struggling, Guantanamo, and don't even get us started on discussing the war in Iraq. Our conversations have challenged our knowledge of the issues and have sometimes caused us to re-think our positions.

This past weekend you could have knocked me over with a feather when he told me he was thinking of voting for Obama. We talked for some time and there is no need to relay the reasons for his change of heart; they are all around us these days. He has always believed in tax cut for business, trickle down economics, America's right to intercede in world affairs, and pulling yourself up by your own bootstraps, as the saying goes. Now, he's questioning his long standing philosophies and those of his party. He's embarrassed to be even considering voting other than Republican; his wife will be voting McCain and this is something he chooses not to discuss with her (I think fears is a more apt description).

I told him I live in a great town most of whom support the Republican platform.

Looking ahead

Mayor Don Mullen

Looking ahead

Next Tuesday is one of the most important days of our year. We all must realize the importance of the election which is before us at this time because of the major issues which face us. Everyone must get out and vote. I encourage each and everyone of you to exercise your right as a citizen of this free country to go to the polls and do your duty to our country.

On a local level, which is where all government begins, the Town Board is hard at work searching for a Town Manager to begin in February, and we are making excellent progress. As most of you know we have moved from a Mayor-Council form of government to a Manager-Council one. We are paying close attention to the public comments which have been made on the issue and have received more than 75 applications for the new manager position. Soon we will be in the process of interviewing the top candidates and hopefully will come to the point of offering the position to our top person. We indeed have a difficult decision to make because we truly have some outstanding candidates, many of them with experience in Western North Carolina. Our search consultant has done an outstanding job of coming up with this great list of applicants.

The governing Boards of the county, Town of Franklin and Town of Highlands had a good meeting at the Fireside Restaurant this past Tuesday and had some good discussion regarding common issues. There is no better way to negotiate many issues than to have direct conversations with the County Commissioners. We will continue the conversation with them regarding the recreation money which comes to us from the county and hopefully will be able to negotiate a longer term contract. Our expenses in the recreation department continue to climb yearly and that must be taken into consideration. Also the occupancy tax which returns to the coffers of the town is important to us for use in the tourism industry of our town. The details of this are yet to be worked out but good progress has been made.

But most of all, just having a social gathering of all the people who make these decisions goes a long way in developing the camaraderie we need in our county to get things done in a proper and civilized way. We are grateful to Jack Horton, the county manager, and Joe Collins, the Mayor of Franklin in helping make the meetings meaningful with the great majority of the commissioners and aldermen attending. And we thank Al Shultz at the Fireside Restaurant in putting together a terrific meal for us with all the trimmings.

Everybody come on down town in Highlands Friday night if you are not afraid of the spooks attacking you. It should be a great time with Main Street closed off for a fun Halloween event. Fun for both children and adults...one of the most exciting events of the year in Highlands. Come dressed for the day and have a great time. And remember, everybody, buy in Highlands. No reason to go off the mountain to buy.

And after years of struggling to get roads around the lakes paved, we have achieved success and we are partly done. Hickory Hill, Chowan, Cullasaja and Wyanok are paved and Dogwood and Azalea are next. This will go a long way to reducing the silt in the lakes and making travel along these roads cleaner and more comfortable. We are grateful to State Senator Snow and Representative West for their assistance in obtaining the funds to achieve these pave of the way they should be done without the destruction of property which would have happened if we had to abide by the original proposal required by the state.

The residents along these roads tell me they are very pleased with the results. We can all celebrate this achievement together and move on with the progress we are having in paving our roads as we also try to obtain funds for the total development of the sewages projects we so desire in our town and obtain funds for the removal of silt from our water supply on the Big Creek arm of Lake Sequoyah.

These are all important projects but in the current economic slowdown they will be difficult to obtain, but it is a goal to which with must persist.

Without bringing party politics into the presentation, she said the U.S. had done some things right concerning the Middle East and most recently Iraq, and some things wrong.

How it started

"The U.S. got involved with Iraq in 2003 with the dual purpose of removing Hussein, eliminating Weapons of Mass Destruction and establishing a beacon of democracy in the Middle East.

"The strategy was brilliantly planned and executed but was botched politically because there was no real plan for what to do with Iraq after we got rid of Saddam Hussein.

"From 2005-2007 the country was out of control. We never secured Iraq after the invasion. We were faced with insurrection by Sunis who had been cut out politically and economically by the new Iraq. The Arab population in Iraq is 20% Suni and 60% Shites and the Kurds make up 20% of the population.

"On top of that there was violence within the community groups - within the Sunis and Shites and between the Sunis and Shites - and the U.S. suffered a lot of casualties.

"In that way, Iraq resembled Lebanon from 1975-1990. There were huge demographic shifts where there used to be mixed neighborhoods. People were moved into isolated enclaves and separated with physical barricades which were erected so they couldn't have contact.

"The Suni Triangle was the heart of the insurgency. It was a tribal group making war on the American army, so the army adopted a classic counter insurgent strategy by hiring insurgents to get them on our side. This gave employment and economic stability.

"To add to the mix, there were other tribal groups from other countries going to war against each other and using a foreign country - Iraqi soil - to fight Americans and other tribal groups. In doing so, these groups like Alkada, actually offended the populations they needed for support.

"So the U.S. decided to adopt the surge. We injected 130,000 additional troops into Iraq to establish stability. It is now stable. It was a short-term tactic, not meant to be a long-term thing. Troops were sent into Iraq to set up operating bases in neighborhoods to maintain order.

"In a military sense, the surge has worked. But in a political sense it hasn't worked. It bought the Iraqis time to get their political act together and build a country without interference from the outside groups using their country as a battleground.

"The Iraqi election is in January. We'll see how that goes. Then we will know if the surge promoted any political progress. If not, then the U.S. is back to where it was when the surge started."

On Election Day
All voting places in Macon County are open from 6:30 a.m. until 7:30 p.m. on Election Day.

Note: If a person has changed addresses and not yet notified the election office, they may still vote on election day once the address is changed. If you do it when you go to vote, it will take more time. Or, you may also go to the Board of Elections office at the county courthouse in Franklin between 6:30 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. on Election Day to change it.

Curbside Voting
If you are unable to enter the voting place because of age or physical disability, you will be allowed to vote either in your vehicle or near the voting place during the hours that the polling place is open.

Absentee “One-Stop” Voting
The “One-Stop” voting process permits voting at the Board of Elections office. This year, “One-Stop” voting ends on Saturday, Nov. 1.

The town has two industries, real estate and tourism, and both are crashing. Real estate sales are down 50% and that hurts the real estate companies who have no sales, the lawyers who file the deals, the painters, plumbers, carpenters who do the eventual remodeling, the furniture dealers, the decorators, and host of others. Tourism is down and the retail sales have followed. The B&Bs are hurting, and when you do see folks in town the telltale of bad times are the shopping bags they are not carrying. I have heard some of the town folk go from, "No for Obama" to "Oh no he's going to win" to "I hope he can help us." Quietly and slowly, people's attitudes are changing.

When things remain the same, attitudes remain the same. When the world changes, when we see what we worked for and lived for change and perhaps slip away we become angry and unthinking. In some countries those conditions would cause a major uprising, even violence and death. But this is America, and in America we think, we learn, we change. Unlike many countries our political process, and just about everything we do, gets better over time. It may not seem that way but it really does. Our political process is not perfect, but this election it's better than the last, and that one was better than the one before it.

This is a country where the liberals push us to the social "left" and the conservatives push to the "right" and the country, where absolutely no one has all the answers, moves forward with a slightly different middle— but never too fast. This is a country where my social agenda and my friend’s business agenda have caused us to talk, to think and both move towards a mutual supporting middle point of view.

Some people would say that my friend needs to stay the course and vote the party. I have Another Point Of View; I believe your vote is private, your business and the single most powerful weapon for change. Don't waste it. Vote!

1. What do you want the public to know about you concerning your credentials to run for a seat on the Macon County Board of Education?
   My professional background includes: 10 years experience as consulting Dietitian for five hospitals in western North Carolina (including Highlands Hospital); and 20 years as Child Nutrition Director for Macon County Schools. I have served as a member/chairman of several boards including Southern Community College, Angel Medical Center, Friends of the Macon County Library, Macon County Health Board, Macon County Community Foundation and Church Trustee.

2. Exactly what sets you apart from the other candidates?
   Honestly, experience! I was a parent for 20 years as our four children attended and graduated from Macon County Schools. I was active in many phases of school activities including the academic foundation, Little League, high school athletics and our Franklin High Band. I have served as a dedicated volunteer in many areas of our county for the 42 years that we have lived here. As a retiree I have the time, energy and commitment and would like to continue to serve our school system.

3. Please tell us a little about your vision for the future of Macon County Schools and how you will help that vision come to fruition.
   Macon County is a great place to live and we have a very good school system—but good can become better! We need to keep working on the building program we have started. The renovation and addition at East Franklin Elementary, the building of Macon 5-6 school and the building of the Elementary K-4 in lots; Maintain our existing buildings and strive to keep them updated; Work to obtain salaries for Macon County employees at least equal to the surrounding areas; Keep a constant evaluation of class size and strive to lower the numbers below our state guidelines; Increase opportunities for students to graduate so we can lower our dropout rate. One option that I would like to see added is vocational classes geared to technology; Examine the budget and our needs each year to make certain that we are using our dollars wisely throughout our county. These things can be accomplished with involvement and communication of faculty, students, parents, administration and funding sources.

The folk who lived in Cherokee loved their church a lot.

At the warm lighted windows of the Lutheran church in Cherokee, all the windows were dark, autumn leaves filled the air.

They stood in the underbrush with mud on their shoes, thinking that booze and drugs were more pleasant than church going.

It could be their heads weren’t screwed on just right.

The Thugs HATED churches, quite without reason, and they went from house to house to house, and then they made tracks.

How the Grinches Stole Christmas

All the church folk were dreaming sweet dreams about Christmas.

The Thugs who lived in Cherokee did not.

They’d rush to the church and then! What a sacrifice.

They loaded some bags and some old empty sacks in their ramshackled van, and then they made tracks.

The thugs yelled “Yee Haw!” and then the van started down toward the tiny wee church on the edge of town.

All the windows were dark, autumn leaves filled the air.

All the church folk were dreaming sweet dreams without care.

postitories, and document management workflows with Microsoft Office integration,” he said.

Designated webmasters at each school will begin training next week so they can teach the administrators and staff at their respective schools.

“On the classroom side of the web application, the teachers will have the ability to easily create their own pages and sites, easily edit their own pages without third-party web editing software,” said Burrell. “They can also create wikis and blogs, create a class syllabus, create instructor-led web-based learning material, and create online quizzes that will give instant feedback.”

Burrell said the new SharePoint server gives the school district the ability to use a customizable template system for creating sub-sites and pages. “This allows us to have a consistent look and feel while providing the same functionality across all sites,” he said. “We also gain the benefit of integration with our current MS Active Directory server system. This will permit us to utilize our current users and groups in our server system, to centrally manage security and access to pages and documents across all sites.”

Currently teachers use various templates and programs to create their websites to which they encourage students and parents to visit to keep up with assignments and projects. Now everyone will be using the same software.

The license for the SharePoint server is $1,580 yearly and the district will be running the SharePoint server software on existing servers at the district office in Franklin and hosting all sites internally.

“We currently spend about $2,160 a year with our static web pages hosted elsewhere,” said Burrell.

He said the district will also save about $2,800 per year on third-party web editing software licenses needed now to service all the teachers.

The board also learned that Macon County Schools was commended for the participation of students, staff and administrators at four schools in the district during this year’s Relay for Life event.

The school district raised more than $13,000; Highlands raised more than $1,800. Facilities Director Terry Bell announced that work on the Highlands School roof is supposed to begin the first week of November with the canopy and covered walkway to follow when the roof is finished.

Work on the bathrooms and soccer field will begin when school is out in June and will likely continue for four to five months, he said.

Author, aviator to sign new thriller
Karlen Lenker will autograph his novel, “The Final Trumpet,” at Cyrano’s Bookshop this Saturday, Nov 1, from 1:30 to 3 p.m. Set in Kenya in 1993, “The Final Trumpet” is a fast moving adventure set amidst the beautiful landscapes of East Africa, and the treacherous ‘unseen’ world of the illegal ivory trade.

A young couple honeymooning on safari is viciously attacked by ruthless elephant poachers — he is murdered, she is kidnapped. Their fathers, who served together as Army Rangers in Vietnam, agonize over the loss (they and the incompetent Kenyan police believe both are dead) and choose on the certain truth that just as John Ruger Forrest, an airline pilot and former highly skilled and decorated sniper, assembles a team of his old Army Ranger comrades to do what must be done.

At great risk to his career, Steven Henry Henderson brings CIA resources to bear to provide Forrest with the support necessary to pose as an elephant researcher while stalking and hunting poachers. But mission that begins as an act of pure vigilante justice and revenge becomes something much more complicated when Henderson discovers his daughter may be alive and Forrest falls in love with Africa, the magnificent elephants and women whose husband hides a dark secret which has the potential to bring them both down.

“The Final Trumpet” was chosen as the “buzz book” at this fall’s Southern Independent Booksellers Alliance trade show in Mobile, Ala, and has been greeted with rave reviews by readers. The author knows about adventure: He’s a Lieutenant Colonel, USAF (retired), A-10 Warthog fighter pilot and combat veteran (Bosnia), who’s logged over 29,000 hours in the air. He’s also a friend of Tom Clancy, who visited Lenker’s combat unit while researching his breakout novel “The Hunt for Red October.”

In civilian life, Lenker was a long-time Delta Airlines pilot. His novel is based on an actual premise. A conservation group once asked Lenker to teach wildlife protection officers how to use small ultralight craft to patrol game reserves from the air, keeping track of poachers. Col. Lenker’s busy life didn’t then allow him the time to travel to Africa, but the idea intrigued him, and after dealing with evidence of the horrible methods used to remove the elephant’s tusks, he was determined to do something to promote awareness of the horrors of poaching. During a recent radio interview in Atlanta, Lenker spoke of these “magnificent African elephants — beautiful animals murdered for their ivory” and said that part of the profits from sales of his book will go to combating poaching. Karl says that “retirement” is not in his lexicon, and now flies helicopters for emergency EMS rescue missions, and helps conservationists track alligators in Central Florida swamps. He is working on his second novel.

Chamber Music Festival Fall Concerts

The Highlands-Cashiers Chamber Music Festival presents its annual Fall Concert on Saturday, Nov. 1 at 5 p.m. at the Performing Arts Center in Highlands. The program will feature a cornerstone of the chamber music repertoire, Johannes Brahms' three Sonatas for Violin and Piano, performed by violinist Cecylia Arzewski and pianist William Ransom. Brahms' three published sonatas for violin and piano were written over a span of ten years, from 1878 to 1888. This is considered his late period, to which the adjective "autumnal" has often been applied. The calm, richly melodic yet slightly bittersweet character that permeates much of the writing in these works makes that description especially appropriate, and makes them perfect for an autumn concert.

Ms. Arzewski is the former Concertmaster of the Atlanta Symphony, and Mr. Ransom is Artistic Director of the HCCMF. Come enjoy this perfect complement to the leaf season in Highlands with beautiful and exciting music performed by internationally known performers.

On Saturday, December 20th at 5 p.m. at the PAC, the HCCMF will present its first ever Christmas Concert, a benefit concert for the whole family entitled "Father Christmas' Favorite Chamber Music." Santa Claus himself will be on hand to introduce some of his favorite works for violin, viola, cello and piano; and good listeners will receive a treat from Father Christmas on the way out.

The Christmas concert will be a benefit for the Highlands Emergency Council.

Because of the popularity of its October public hard-hat tours, The Bascom will continue tours of its underconstruction Oak Street art center throughout November. On Nov. 1, Pat Taylor, owner’s representative and co-chair of The Bascom’s facilities committee, will conduct a tour at 10 a.m. On Nov. 8, 15 and 22, Executive Director Linda Steigleder will conduct tours at 3 and 4 p.m. Construction on the campus is 75 percent complete. The art center will open mid 2009. Above, workers install the metal roof on top of one of the cupolas of the 21,000-square-foot main building. The rest of the roofing should be winding down this coming week. To attend a tour, call (828) 526-4949, ext. 8#, or email jconnor@thebascom.org to sign up for a tour time. Reservations are required.
... SPIRITUALLY SPEAKING from page 27

When they came to the quaint little church in the glen.
"This is gonna be easy," the Grinchy Thugs hissed,
And they crept round the back, empty bags in their fists.
They broke the glass doors, and said "This is a dink!
A child could do it and not even flinch!"
They hesitated just once but just for a minute,
Then they opened their bags and started stuffing loot in it.
Snooping the chapel, the Thugs cried "Ho-ho!"
The equipment in here is the first thing to go!
They slithered and slunk with smiles that couldn’t be meaner,
Why, they even took the church vacuum cleaner!
Sound system, candlesticks, copier and printer,
Computer and fax machine and scanner.
And they stuffed it in bags, and then the Thugs,
Very sneily, crept out and packed their loot in their ride.
The next thing they did was jimmy a door
That led down to the basement food pantry for the poor.
They rummaged around and they took all the food!
They stole all the pudding, and the frozen roast beef.
They cleaned out that pantry as quick as a flash,
They even stole the last can of Spam hash!
They hurried outside and loaded the van,
Then they drove off, delighted with their scam.
In the church they left nothing but hooks and some wire.
And the one speck of food that they left in the house,
Was a crumb that was even too small for a mouse.
They had done much the same to other folk’s houses,
leaving crumbs much too small for the other folk’s mouses.
The very next Sunday, the Thugs hid and watched the wee church.
Delighted they’d left all the folks in the church.
"Pooh-pooh to these people!" they hissed with a smirk,
They’re just now discovering we ransacked their church.
They’re just finding out and we know what they’ll do,
All the folks will stand around for a moment or two,
And then an all the members will cry “Boo-hoo!”
That is a sound we simply must hear,
So they paused and the Thugs put their hands to their ears.
And they did hear a sound coming out of the door,
It started out low then it started to grow.
But this sound wasn’t sad, this sound was merry
It couldn’t be so, but it was merry, very!
They stared down at the chapel. The Thugs popped their eyes!
Then they shook! What they saw was a shocking surprise!
All the folk at the church, the tall and the small,
Were singing! Without any equipment at all!
They sang praises to God for all of their blessings,
As if nothing at all in the building was missing.
They read and they worshipped without microphones,
And you could still hear the music at neighboring homes.
And then something happened that made the Thugs freeze. All
All the church members got down on their knees
And prayed for THEM! Asking that they repent,
And turn their lives over to The One Who Was Sent.
They hadn’t stopped worship from coming, it came,
Somehow or other, it came just the same.
And the Thugs, with their Grinch-feet with feet ice cold in dread,
Stood puzzling and puzzling and scratching their heads.
"It came without phones, It came without computers,
It came without sound systems, printers or Hoovers."
And they puzzled three hours, till their puzzlers were sore.
Then the Thugs thought of something they hadn’t before!
Maybe being Christian,” they thought, “doesn’t depend on your stuff.”
“Maybe being Christian...perhaps...means God is enough!!”

Candidate Pons visits Highlands

Susan Pons, Candidate for 50th District NC State Senate, visited Highlands, NC on Tuesday October 28th. After meeting with small business owners and home school families over lunch she walked around downtown meeting the business owners, their employees and the customers and residents. She also stopped in for a coffee break with some concerned voters, taking the time to hear their concerns about the corruption in Raleigh.

Susan’s Platform:

- Return Honor to God and Country
- Reduce Taxes
- Redirect Educational Priorities
- Restrict Governmental Controls
- Re-secure Private Property Owners
- Re-enforce Legal Immigration Laws
- Reinstate Integrity Instead of Corruption
- Revive Respect for Life
Combine olive oil and wine, brush chops with mixture and season with salt and pepper. Grill chops for 2 minutes per side. Arrange on a platter and serve with mint pesto. Pairing Suggestion: Pinot Evil Pinot Noir

Grilled Shrimp and Chicken Kebabs

Serves 6

Time: 30 minutes

(plus 1 hour marinade)

- 2 cloves minced garlic
- 1/3 cup fresh lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon fresh chopped rosemary
- 2/3 cup olive oil
- 1/3 cup Angel Juice Chardonnay
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 24 large shrimp peeled and deveined
- 12 chicken tenders
- 12 wooden skewers (6 or 12-inch)
- Salsa (optional)

Whisk garlic, lemon juice, rosemary, olive oil, wine, salt and pepper together; divide into two bowls and marinate shrimp and chicken separately for 1 hour. Thread 2 to 4 shrimp per skewer and 1 to 2 tenders per skewer. Grill chicken about 4 minutes per side and shrimp about 2 to 3 minutes per side until pink. Remove kebabs from grill and serve with salsa of your choice. Pairing Suggestions: Killer Juice Merlot or Angel Juice Chardonnay

The following students were inducted into the New Century Scholars program at a SCC Sylva campus on Tuesday September 30th. Macon Middle 7th grade students: Clell Ashe, Nathan Aydelotte, Kailin Carpenter, Megan Crisp, Lucas Dodge, Kyler Fitch, Deaven Golding, Russell Helma, T.J. Harden, Morgan Henry, Brooke Jones, Nathan Jowers, Brendan Karcher, Luke Keener, Rachel Kelly, Daniel Marr, Carissa McGaha, Kayla McLane, Amelia Owens, Austin Powers, Chris Richards, Kassandra Rodgers, Kaitlyn Roper, Dwight Shampine, Brent Shepherd, Hope Stewart, Ethan Stiles, Danielle Waldrop, Faith Williamson, Kayla Woods. Highlands 7th grade students: Cara Hedden, Matthew Rodriguez, Nantahala 7th.

New crop of New Century Scholars inducted

The New Century Scholars Program is a collaborative educational effort among the public schools in Macon, Jackson and Swain counties and Southwestern Community College. The New Century Scholars program targets “high potential” students at the end of sixth grade and provides extra support to those students through their middle school and high school years. Students are nominated based on their potential for academic success, yearly promotion and leadership ability. Selected students must display effort in the classroom and have a positive attitude and desire for education. They must display good behavior and character and meet the county attendance policy.

Upon completion of high school, each student, who has successfully followed the contractual agreements with the school and the parents, will be awarded a tuition scholarship for each of his/her two years at Southwestern Community College. Western Carolina University has added a guaranteed scholarship that will enable students who complete the NCS program and earn an Associates Degree at SCC to continue their education at the University for two years and earn a Bachelors Degree.

In addition to maintaining good grades and behavior, students are required to perform 10 hours a year of volunteer service. This volunteer service to our community is a way that the New Century Scholar can give back the gift that he or she has been given.

New Century Scholars is a locally funded initiative. For each new class of NCS students inducted, funds are raised on their behalf to support participation in New Century Scholars. The number of new NCS is determined by the sum of the collected funds raised within the community each year. These funds are pooled and used for the collective benefit of the students in that class of students. Funding currently comes from local businesses, individuals, clubs, organizations, and fund-raisers. All funds raised for NCS tuition support are held until graduation and used for tuition and fee payments.

For further information regarding the New Century Scholars Program please contact Pam Collins NCS Coordinator for the Macon County Schools at 524-3314.

#BN1F Level of Difficulty Easy

THE SETUP:
The cube has 27 consecutive numbers in it, arranged in three layers with 9 numbers each. These numbers are arranged in a special pattern: For each layer, the sum of the three numbers in each row, column or diagonal is 3 times its center number. Eight diagonals connect all 3 layers by running through the center number of the middle layer. Each diagonal contains 3 numbers equalling the total of the three center numbers. One of the diagonals is shown with circles.

THE CHALLENGE:
Start with the three center numbers for each layer and the other numbers given. Now pour a cup of coffee, pick up a pencil and eraser and try to figure out where the other numbers belong. Good Luck!

Email: pseudocube8@aol.com.
