Highlands School renovations to begin

News Highlands School has been waiting for was finally disclosed at the May 26 School Board meeting held in Nantahala.

For some time the school board, as well as Highlands School officials, have been waiting to find out how much money it was going to cost to do the renovations OK'd by the Macon County Commission.

Recently, expecting high bids, the commission suggested OKing only a portion of the planned renovations and suggested bidding out other portions as amendments or alternatives.

This was done by eight contractors - Carolina Specialties, Creative Builders, H & M Construction, Mccarroll Construction, Mtn. Health Contracting, Warth Construction, Wells & West and Western Builders.

Base bids ranged from $319,800 to $568,550 and after the four addendums or alternates were added ranged from $380,400 to $671,248.

The Highlands School renovation bid submitted by H & M Construction, which had the low bid across the board, was approved at the school board meeting.

The bid of $380,400 is for renovating the school and parking lot.

County says shelter to open mid-June

At Tuesday afternoon's Macon County Commission meeting, the board discussed a myriad of topics including a pending animal shelter and ordinance, the use of state lottery funds, a new greenspace, DOT committee and task limits.

Sharon Archer of the Humane Society told the commission that the society hopes to work with the board for like goals rather than working against each other as in the past. She said she hoped that should animals have to be euthanized, they would subsequently be cremated rather than put in the land fill.

The Humane Society has a crematorium on site and offered its services at a flat fee to the county.

County Manager Jack Horton said the animal shelter will hopefully open June 15 and the commission agreed - at Sheriff Robert McCarroll's suggestion.

Each year student athletes at Highlands School honor members of the community who show the most Highlands School spirit through their attendance at sports events. At the Athletic Banquet, Tuesday, May 26 at the Rec Park, David and Sammie Leffler, were named – for the second time! David and Sammie are parents of senior Hunter Leffler. Highlands to host ‘pet parade’ over Labor Day

Though it took a back seat to the Kelsey-Hutchinson Park discussion at the May 20 Town Board meeting, commissioners OK’d a dog parade through town over Labor Day weekend.

Representatives of the Cashiers-Highlands Humane Society requested permission to stage the first Annual Mountain Tail Waggers Walk on Sept. 5.

The route would be similar to the Highlands Christmas Parade route, beginning at Highlands School and ending at the Kelsey-Hutchinson Park.

The parade and the subsequent pet festival set up in the park along side the annual Village Arts & Crafts Festival which is already scheduled for the park, will require a portion of Pine Street to be closed to traffic and parking.

This request had commissioners baffled, because at the special Town Board meeting just a week earlier, the Humane Society had been denied permission to host a dog parade over Labor Day weekend.

This was done by eight contractors - Carolina Specialties, Creative Builders, H & M Construction, Mccarroll Construction, Mtn. Health Contracting, Warth Construction, Wells & West and Western Builders.

Base bids ranged from $319,800 to $568,550 and after the four addendums or alternates were added ranged from $380,400 to $671,248.

Forest Service closes caves and mines to protect bats in Southeast

Most caves and mines on National Forests in the southeastern United States are being closed for one year in an effort to protect bats, according to Regional Forester Liz Agpaoa.

“We are working to stop the uncontrolled spread of White Nose Syndrome (WNS) among bat species,” she said. “The closures will allow scientists and land managers time to work together and study the fungus, learn how it spreads and how to best address it.”

Under the 12-month closure order signed by Agpaoa on May 21, 2009, all caves and abandoned mines on national forests and units in 13 Southeast states from Oklahoma to Virginia and Florida will be closed unless posted as open. All uses would be prohibited except except organized rescue efforts and other actions specifically authorized by the agency.

White Nose Syndrome, or WNS, is named for a white fungus that appears on the faces, ears, wings and feet of hibernating bats. Scientists are trying to determine how WNS affects bats. The disease causes bats to come out of hibernation severely underweight. In a desperate attempt to avoid starving, the affected bats are often seen flying during the day. They are looking for food, but the insects they normally eat in the spring are not yet available. Once a colony is affected, the fungus spreads rapidly and may kill 90 percent of bats at the hibernation site in just two years.

Caves are a natural and important part of forests and help control forest and agricultural insect pests.

Scientists believe the WNS fungus is spread bat-to-bat as they cluster in caves and mines, and it may be unknowingly transferred from one cave or mine to another on the footwear and gear of humans. Infected caves and mines may not show obvious signs of its presence.

No reported human illnesses have been attributed to the fungus.

“The syndrome has already affected caves in Virginia in close proximity to the George Washington and Jefferson National Forests,” said Dennis Krusac, Threatened and Endangered Species Specialist for the Forest Service’s Southern Region. “Staying out of caves and mines is the one thing we can do right now to slow the further spread of the fungus.”

The closure order was implemented in hopes of protecting some of the largest bat populations in the country, Krusac said.

Many national forests in the Southern Region are home to several species of bats, including the federally endangered Indiana bat; Virginia big-eared bat, gray bat and Ozark big-eared bats.

Nearly 500,000 bats have died as a result of WNS in the New England and Mid-Atlantic states, including almost 25,000 Indiana bats.

How many mines and caves are there on National Forest lands in North Carolina?

There are numerous unnamed small caves and abandoned mines on Forest lands, particularly in the mountains and on the Uwharrie National Forest in the Piedmont. Blowing Springs cave and smaller caves in the Nantahala River Gorge are included in this closure. The Ray Mine area on the Appalchian District in Yancey County includes numerous small mine openings, all of which are closed with this closure order. Rock hounding is limited to exterior surface collection.

Guns won’t make our National parks safer

Dear Editor,

What went on in Washington regarding a gun rider to a needed credit card bill is wrong. We need to let our government officials know how we feel.

Most individuals in this country were shocked regarding the inclusion of the “gun rider” in the needed bill. This type of special interest centered compromise weakens the integrity of our political process and points to a serious governmental flaw in the legislative process.

Reasoning, factual evidence and potential negative consequences were ignored by those who elected to stand up to the powerful lobbyists in Washington.

Liz Agpaoa.

The facts speak for themselves

Dear Editor:

I would like to respond to Mr. MacLean and his remarks concerning his alleged untruths in my last letter printed in the May 21 issue of this paper.

Days to remember

Dear Editor,

I’m writing in regards to Fred Woolridge’s column in the May 21 issue entitled “I’m a child of the ’40s.”

This was a good column! I am also a child of the ’40s and know about the ice cream man...I also know a beautiful sight when I see one.

My street filled with coat guards – curb to curb, going to the Fort Green to maneuver. Our city, St. Augustine, FL, was full of service men for WWII. We were children but a vivid memory.

I also remember the Victory Garden my dad planted in the front yard — a strange sight for dity street; also recapped tires and sugar rations.

It was war, and I suppose a recession. We didn’t know the difference. Just as people today don’t realize they make lots of money and spend it, now they have to recede, and it’s hard.

The candy bars are still there — smaller and cost more. Just like the coffee cans and now the ice cream. But we will survive! It just takes a little belt tightening and a change of habit. We can do it! Recede, recede. We can do it.

Democracy works

Dear Editor,

I want to publicly thank the mayor and town board of Highlands for voting the right way on the park issue. This is a good example of democracy in action, on the mayor put it.

It appear that core samples taken on May 20 showed that there is enough soil depth to accommodate more of the water detention units than previously thought, making the proposed storm water...

May 30 Memorial Day

Highlands Memorial American Legion Post 370 will be honoring the sacrifice of all Veterans of past and present wars Saturday, May 30 at 1 p.m. at the Veterans Memorial at 6th and Main. This is an annual event to “Honor the Dead and provide meaningful remembrance and help to the Living.”

Most non-veterans do not recognize the importance of the day honoring their fellow Americans killed in war. Memorial Day has just become simply another day off from work to many Americans. The local American Legion Post will always be the standard bearer to carry the torch of remembrance. With two wars underway, there is no excuse for anyone not to remember the true meaning of Memorial Day.

‘Fu Ku’

Only a couple of churches were left partially standing when Allied soldiers finally arrived to conquer the rubble. Not only did American bombs kill thousands of Germans in Le Havre, many French citizens were also blown to pieces because carpet bombing doesn’t play favorites. Killing civilians back then was more acceptable then now. Hmm... maybe that’s part of the resentment.

As I stood outside Notre Dame church putting my fingers into the shrapnel holes left there as a reminder of thew war, I could have sworn I heard a Frenchman whisper “Fu Ku” to a friend. Nah, my hearing is slipping.

As usual, we wandered around Le Havre until we were totally lost. This is one of our favorite things to do. The first person we stopped for help was a crew member from our ship who was also lost. Finally, we had no choice but to stop a local and ask for directions.

With a big smile on her face, an impeccably dressed French lady who spoke good English with a heavy French accent aimed us in the right direction. She sounded like my mother-in-law. Did you know the ‘Fu Ku’ is half French Canadian? As we parted, did I hear the nice woman mumble “Fu Ku” under her breath? Nah! I gotta get a hearing aid.

Since we were in Le Havre on a Sunday, (Mother’s Day), the town was closed down tighter than Highlands’ Main Street on a February Monday morning. Le Havre citizens really didn’t care about 3,000 potential customers from the ship with pockets full of money. Sunday is their day off.

The parks were crammed with happy children and the churches were full of worshippers. Since we had wandered miles from our shuttle bus, we decided to take a taxi. Ha, good luck. There are no taxis on Sunday. Taxi drivers were with their families.

Finally, I guess you’re wondering about the “Fu Ku” phrase. Write this down because I know you’ll want to use it. Whenever two Japanese people accidentally bump into one another, they say “Fu Ku” to each other instead of excuse me. It means good luck. Do not confuse this with the tiny “Fu Ku” bird that, in a frenzy, flew up Hillary Clinton’s nighty. What, you don’t believe me? Look it up.

PARIS would be a great place to visit if weren’t for all those stupid gum Parisians. I didn’t make that up. Well, I did throw in the dud gum just for fun. The offensive saying has been floating around for years. Attention all Frenchmen, hear me out before you take back your Statue of Liberty…. Nah, on second thought, don’t hear me out, just come and get the statue because we’re choking to death on our huddled masses.

The evil missus and I are finally back in the states on terra firma and suffering from major jet lag. It’s 2:48 a.m. and I’m sitting at my keyboard with an oversized coffee cup in hand. No one makes coffee like the kind you make at home, don’t you agree? No, not my coffee, your coffee. Later, I’ll go out and hug my grass and thank God we made it homesafely.

We have been in seven countries in 18 days, including France. Hey, guess what, folks? The French people are sick and tired of hearing about how they would be speaking German if it weren’t for us. “How many times do we have to thank America before we get fed up?” a Frenchman asked. And are you sitting down? The other countries we visited weren’t all that thrilled to see us either. You know what I say? “Fu Ku!”

Even though the United States has been slipping as of late, we are still the wealthiest and most progressive free country on the globe. Add the fact we have been using our bully pulpit to push other countries around since World War II, and presto, we have world resentment. Big time resentment! We found the French people no different than the other countries we visited, except maybe Denmark, who are more interested in getting naked in a pile than being resentful. Hey, I do naked but it’s an ugly sight. More on Denmark later.

Actually, we never went to Paris because we didn’t want to endure the six-hour round trip ride from Le Havre with everyone coughing and sneezing on us just so a French chef could spit on our salads.

Without going into great detail about Le Havre, let me tell you it was the most carpet bombed city in the world during World War II. Le Havre was totally flattened and looked much worse than London or Berlin when the shelling finally stopped.

Google isn’t the final word

A year or two ago, I started carrying a laptop to work. It was sporadic at first, a once in a while sort of thing. I used it to do research if I was reviewing a case. Google is not as good as a medical library, but it’s faster and remarkably informative.

Sometimes, a Google search turns up everything except what you’re looking for. I once think of it; I’m on my second Toshiba. The screen went black on the first one while it was in the operating room. For a few weeks, I could tilt the screen just right, or tap it in a certain place, and it would spring back to life. Finally it died. I didn’t know enough about computers at the time to know that I could easily have retrieved our pictures from Africa and the Galapagos, and a ski trip to Austria. Even if we go to those places again, Bull won’t be eight.

When someone walked off with my dead computer, he carried away a part of my life, and a significant bit of the history of my family. To a程度, I did know enough about computers to know that I should backup my photos. I’m told that there are two or three different ways to do it. I just never got around to it. I’m not really angry with who ever took it. It had been sitting in the same place on the same computer for a few months. Maybe he thought I was through with it. I put a note on the bulletin board. It said to keep the computer, but don’t load my pictures and get them to me, no questions asked. No one ever came forward. That’s the bad part about taking a laptop to the office.

The good part is that it settles a lot of arguments, usually, but not always, in my favor. I tend to take the position that if something sounds too unbelievable to be true, it’s probably false. The Internet is full of rubbish and it spreads like wildfire. It passes rapidly from the blog of one extremist to the next. These uninformed, unscrutinized dunces seem to appear more often on right wing blogs than on left, but that might just be my bias.

Last week, a guy said that the government should stay out of banking and auto manufacturing. A lot of people feel that way, and I’m sure President Obama, President Bush before him, and Congress would have preferred American business to run itself. They didn’t feel that they should let the American economy slide down the tube just because a perfect storm of incompetence and bad luck had created mighty tough times.

Anyway, this guy offered as evidence that the Federal Government couldn’t even run a whore house. They only thing a whore house sells, the argument goes, are sex and booze. Anybody, or any institution, who can’t make a profit selling those commodities, shouldn’t stay out of business altogether.

I remembered the government took over a legal brothel, Mustang Ranch, in Nevada several years in a tax seizure. The story going around was that after seizing it the government had continued to operate it and had gone broke. I tried www.snopes.com, a frequent arbiter of friendly disagreements to refute or confirm the story. No luck.

Next I turned to Google. Several conservative blogs supported the story, in fact, repeated it nearly verbatim. It took only a few minutes more to find the truth, which was that the government had planned to operate the brothel, but had been blocked by a Federal judge. The story, despite frequent repetitions, was baseless. It made good copy and it buttressed the argument that government should stay out of business, but it was without merit.

There are a lot of stories like that, bizarre stories that people are either too lazy to confirm, or choose not to confirm because they like them too much the way they are. It’s sloppy journalism, but that’s what journalism without accountability produces.

mitigation effort adequate without the need to close Pine Street.

While Pine Street may not be beffiled with parked cars on any given day (except for Sunday), it is an extremely busy thoroughfare that is impenetrable in its many functions to the commerce and traffic of this small town.

I hope that the town also plans to clean out the drainage ditches and pipes around town. Many of them are choked with dirt and weeds making them ineffective and causing unnecessary street flooding in the very areas where the storm water mitigation project is considered essential.

The Oprah Winfrey solution

By John Armor

I have enjoyed Oprah Winfrey’s work on television since she showed up as the second banana on People are Talking with Richard Scher on WJZ in Baltimore, four decades ago. Now, she is the leading talk show host in the known universe. Although her audience has decreased from nearly 9 million in 2005 to 7.3 million in 2008, she is still the top of her profession. Oprah’s success demonstrates that several efforts of the current administration to restrict both freedom of the press and freedom of speech are both wrong and unconstitutional. There is a proposed bill in Congress which would institute government controls on contents on the Internet. The FCC is pursuing two efforts, called respectively “diversity” and “localism.”

For the details of these proposals, see www.SaveRadioFreeAmerica.org and www.thesacru.org. As a full revelation, along with colleagues, I wrote many of the articles found on both websites. The intent of “diversity” is to use threats to the continued licenses to current owners to produce more female and “persons of color” as owners of radio and TV stations. This effort is based on an assumption that only women can talk about matters that concern women, and likewise “persons of color” all think alike and no one else has anything to offer to members of these groups. Those are sexist and racist assumptions that no government should be engaging in.

The other effort is to make sure that local communities are “fair” in what they broadcast. This would be determined by local “community boards” who would decide whether programming “serves” the communities. This demonstrates that the current government has no use for what Thomas Jefferson called “the free market of ideas.” Ordinary citizens should not be allowed to determine what they prefer to hear and see, by using the dials on their radios and TVs.

Now, consider the truths that Oprah Winfrey exhibits. Do all women think alike, and all “persons of color”? The Winfrey answer is no. Most of her listeners are white women, with a fair number of white men included. Does Oprah depend on black-owned, or female-owned stations to carry her program? Absolutely not. Any program that seeks to get syndicated on the dominant station in each market, and then to become the dominant show in that time period. Since the goal is commercial success, each participant—station owners down to program hosts—seek the biggest audience, to attract maximum advertising dollars. Race and success have nothing to do with this. That is exactly how the Winfrey Show has built its success.

The Administration’s efforts are posed in terms of “fairness.” But its ideas of “fairness” include telling the free press what it can, and cannot, broadcast to audiences freely choose. The Oprah Winfrey Solution is to let free people determine their own media choices freely. It was also Jefferson’s solution for “the marketplace of ideas.” It is also the constitutional solution. But apparently the administration officials either haven’t read the First Amendment lately, or do not take it seriously.

By agreeing publicly that the Fairness Doctrine is dead, and acquiescing in an amendment in Congress said the same thing, the Administration pretends to have no interest in censorship, especially in talk radio. But its other actions, and certain internal documents never intended to become public, reveal an intent to replace the Fairness Doctrine of other forms of censorship.

Not many people in the talk show community are aware of the threats to them and their listeners. But as the pressure from the administration on all fronts increases, you can expect this subject to achieve front-page status on radio and TV. It will also become a lively debate in Congress, where all but 19 Senators voted for the DeMint Amendment against reestablishment of the Fairness Doctrine. Once the American people realize that their “freedom to listen” is at issue, as Justice Scalia called it in a recent argument before the Supreme Court, the subject will light up on talk radio, and then in the halls of Congress.

It may be sufficient to kill the new forms of censorship, without going to the courts, where recent cases indicate the forms will die if they get there.

Usury

Katie Brugger
k-brugger@hotmail.com

I got my first credit card in the early 1980s. It was issued by Citibank and I wondered why the mailing address was in South Dakota. Why would a New York bank have a post office box in Sioux Falls?

I finally learned the answer to that question by reading an article in the April 2009 Harper's Magazine (“Infinite Debt: How Unlimited Interest Rates Destroyed the Economy,” by Thomas Geoghegan). In 1978 a United States Supreme Court decision (Marquette National Bank vs. First of Nebraska Service Corp) deregulated state usury laws. At that time many states regulated the maximum interest rate that could be charged to one of their citizens; many states capped that rate around nine percent.

The Court held that Minnesota could not prevent a bank located in Nebraska from issuing credit cards at a higher interest rate to Minnesota residents, because the National Banking Act of 1864 allowed national banks to charge interest at the rate set by the state “where the bank is located.” So banks started moving to states willing to remove all limits on interest, such as South Dakota and Delaware.

Technically “usury” means interest, but the meaning it has developed is “excessive interest.” The first known laws, the Code of Hammurabi from 1750 B.C., had a section regulating interest rates. The maximum interest rate for cereal loans, repayable in kind, was 33 1/3 percent per year. The rate for silver currency was 20 percent. Creditors who exceeded the fixed interest rate were punished by depriving them of their debt. Most societies in the intervening 4 centuries have either regulated interest rates or banned the charging of interest altogether.

What makes all of this interesting and relevant, Mr. Geoghegan asserts, is that the deregulation of interest rates played a significant part in the economic crisis we find ourselves in today. With the relaxation of usury laws, profits in banking soared. This drew capital away from manufacturing and into the financial sector. It was no longer acceptable to earn a 5 percent return making automobiles or vacuum cleaners when you could lend it to poor people and make 50 or 75 percent.

CBS Moneywatch reported that “in 1996, the Supreme Court held that fees for late payments, exceeding limits, cash advances, returned checks, and annual membership were a form of interest and also immune to state rate limits. Consumer advocates feared the decision would send fees skyrocketing. They were right. The effect of all these fees and penalty rates has sometimes been disastrous. A court found that one elderly Ohio woman living on Social Security paid Discover $3,400 on her original $1,900 credit-card debt and still owed the company $5,000 in penalty interest and fees.”

In 2002, financial firms accounted for more than 40 percent of U.S. corporate profits, and this doesn’t count companies like GM, which, Mr. Geoghegan writes, “really makes its money by running a bank on the side. After a while, said a friend from Detroit, ‘the only reason they were making cars was so they could make loans.’”

In addition, the financial sector drew a large percentage of our nation’s intellectual talent. In June of 2008, 39 percent of the Harvard graduating class went directly into the financial sector.

To continue growing, the financial world has to innovate, just like any other sector of the economy; it constantly needs new “products.” We’ve got derivatives and credit-default swaps. Mr. Geoghegan is particularly withering in his description of these newfangled financial “instruments”: “We had always had futures, but now we had futures about futures. We had long had futures on the weather; for example there is a weather index. But now we have futures on the weather futures. These are the ‘products’ not widgets, etc., that our form of financial capitalism makes. This is what our country makes now; new products on which to place our bets.” According to Mr. Geoghegan, our nation has become a casino; the “notional” value of these bets in 2007 was $516 trillion.

At the same time, without interest-rate caps, lenders had the motivation to offer people more credit than they could reasonably afford. No longer was a credit-worthy borrower the best customer. In fact the industry name for someone who pays back balances each month is “deadbeat.” Mull on that at a while. The bigger profits were made when credit card companies could charge 25 or 35 percent interest on an account that would never be paid off. For payday lenders, interest rates could reach annual levels of 500 percent or higher. (A companion piece in the April Harper’s describes the payday loan business.)

before, merchants turned out in force to oppose the closing of Pine Street as it applied to the park design proposed.

"Just last week you told us that closing the street would be detrimental particularly over holiday weekends, and now you're saying it's OK," said Commissioner Amy Patterson.

Cynthia Strain, who organizes the Village Arts & Crafts fair two times a year, said her group would share the park space with the Tail Waggers and closing just a portion of Pine Street to parking and vehicular traffic would be OK.

After the parade, which will be from 9:30-10:30 a.m. on Sept. 5, vendors will be selling hot dogs and other light food items at the park, as well as pet-related paraphernalia.

The route will start at Highlands School go north on Fifth Street, right on Smallwood Avenue, left on Leonard Road, left on Horse Cove Road, right on to Fifth Street then on to Pine Street and the park.

The portion of Pine Street from the Macon Bank property line to Fifth Street will be barricaded at both ends from Friday, Sept. 4 at 6:30 p.m. to Saturday, Sept. 5 at 6:30 p.m.

There was some discussion about circumventing the town ordinance concerning the selling of food items but Mayor Don Mullin said that could be worked out—possibly by donating the food rather than selling it.

The pet parade and festival will be a fundraiser for the Cashiers-Highlands Humane Society.

Cassie Welch, executive director of the society, said she expects the parade to bring hundreds, if not thousands, of people and their pets to town.

Police Chief Bill Harrell said his department had been queried and as long as it was OK with the Town Board it was OK with him. Officers will be manning the barricades along the parade route to ensure order.

Commissioner Hank Ross said he’s never had a problem closing Pine Street and made the motion to allow its partial closure for the event. The rest of the board followed suit with an unanimous vote.

Welch said just last week such an event held in the Atlanta area brought thousands of people to town.

“This will be a good promotion for the town of Highlands, its businesses and organizations,” said Welch.

He's not lying...he's selling

His eminence has flip-flopped in about every way possible, some actually going in the right direction, some to the detriment of the country. But before we get to the silver-tongued wizard, let's review the recent activities of our nation's political leaders.

A disclosure by Newsweek's liberal correspondent Eleanor Clift added to Joe Biden's list of inexplicably stupid public pronouncements. Seems like Joe was entertaining a gaggle of reporters at his residence, the Naval Observatory, when he felt the need to conduct a guided tour through the secret bunker in the basement, the bunker that secreted VP Cheney as the events of 9/11 unfolded.

Associated Content reports, "How damaging VP Joe Biden's latest gaffe is hardly the point. Joe Biden is liable to say anything at any time, regardless of the consequences to himself, his administration, or the country. Next time it may be some intelligence secret that would be far more damaging. Even worse, Joe Biden is a heartbeat away from being President himself, in which post he could do the country real damage. (A heartbeat behind Joe Biden, of course, is Nancy Pelosi, who is in a scandal of her own making)." When the revelation broke, Biden was banished to the Balkans where, hopefully, no one understands English.

"Speaking of Speaker Pelosi," I just had the pleasure to watch Nasty Nancy stiffing the press in her Friday press conference on the subject of her rift with the CIA. One assumes she realized she could not improve upon her disastrous (for her) disclosure that the CIA constantly lied to Congress concerning enhanced interrogation techniques used in the early part of the decade. For those of you who missed her performance, she verbally turned herself inside out lying about their torture. It was so bad I was almost embarrassed for her. Well, not really.

It was not a great week for the administration.

The infallible one introduced Secretary of Defense Robert Gates as William (Bill) Gates who, I understand, was elsewhere paying no attention whatsoever to the occasion. To be fair and balanced, Obama gave the commencement speech at Notre Dame and did a magnificent job in facing the abortion issue. His solution is to talk about it and the audience ate it up. That'll do it; let's talk about it. H ow tellably

With this being another terrific NBA Eastern Conference Final game, I thought it would be appropriate to provide some running commentary from Tuesday’s Game 4. As always, these are live thoughts from the game.

- 9:13: We are rejoicing in the game in progress from the Casa de Potts. The athletic banquet ran a little long tonight, but it is just now the start of the second quarter.
- 9:13: Craig Sager just interviewed Mike Brown (Cavaliers coach). Brown provided some non-crucial info for the viewers at home. I wish they would do those in game interviews with college coaches. Over/Under on Coach K f-bombs would be about 5.
- 9:17: Just showed a commercial for “The Hangover…” Mike Tyson and Phil Collins = comedy gold.
- 9:23: It’s pretty amazing how the Magic can get a wide open three whenever they want-6:10” Hedo Turkoglu on the pick and roll gives them a totally different dimension than most NBA teams.
- 9:30: Martin Gortat just dunked it harder than any white guy I have seen since…well let’s just say it’s been a while.
- 9:32: Horrible sequence for the Magic…followed by a shot of Stan Van Gundy looking…constipated. Cleveland takes the lead, as no one in their right mind wants to step in front of LeBron James barreling towards the rim.
- 9:43: Orlando has hurt themselves at the FT line in this first half….wow, LeBron with the one-handed snag of an alley oop and then the reverse left dunk…no hurr.
- 9:50: Halftime let’s all watch Charles Barkley…dudes is pretty funny.
- 10:00: Pittsburgh scores an empty net goal to put away Carolina and go the Stanley Cup finals. Still a great showing from the Canes this year.
- 10:12: Orlando comes out with a 7-0 run to start the second half, and now the crowd is in it and we should see a good second half.
- 10:24: Onething that doesn’t help the NBA, all of the whining and crying after every single call- it’s like watching men’s league basketball… but with real athletes. (Yes, I realize that I am a chief whiner.) Although, come to think of it, Zydunas Ilgauskas moves about as well as a men’s league player…he looks like he needs a vodka infusion right now.
- 10:29: Lebron posts and then passes to James….Jordan fades away. As I type this James hits a fadeaway three…shows what I know.
- 10:38: Stan Van Gundy with Craig Sager “we gotta play harder in the fourth quarter.” Riveting television…..although Sager’s suit along with Van Gundy’s suit in the same picture is enough to trigger anyone’s gag reflex. I am torn on whether or not Stan the Man is a good coach. They do some good things, so it is obvious that he is having some impact, but they also do some really dumb stuff too.
- 10:44: Cleveland is getting into the danger zone here, they aren’t stopping Orlando offensively, and it doesn’t help that LeBron is playing with guys from the Cleveland YMCA. They need to get some pick and roll with James and Anderson Varejo if they want to stay in this game.
- 10:55: Cleveland has climbed back…ok who am I kidding. Orlando has been garbage on these last couple of possessions. On a sidenote Stan Van Gundy sounds like he gargles with hydrochloric acid.

- 10:57: Rashard Lewis hits a huge three where has he been tonight?
- 11:05: LeBron… mercy what a dunk. He hasn’t been great in the fourth quarter tonight, but in the open court he is money.
- 11:07: Reason #233 why Orlando fades at the end of games, why in Blue Hades is Rafer Alston taking a three early in the shot clock? Turkoglu is the guy here.
- 11:08: Turkoglu promptly misses a jumper then, with a chance to take the last shot. Mikal Pietrus 호 is up a three with 10 seconds left in the game. Who is coaching Orlando right now? Horrible decision making on both sides. Orlando will have another chance to win in regulation here after getting the lucky bounce.
- 11:11: Timeout Orlando – great inbound play drawn up there Stan…jeez.
- 11:14: Rashard Lewis! That was actually well designed inbound play. Why didn’t Stan call that one the first time? Alright Lebron, now it’s your turn. Are we going to overtime or is this one over?
- 11:17: Wow – Lebron bailed out right there on a blocking foul call-Pietrus tried to flop there, but Lebron ran him over. And Lebron hits both of the game…we could go to overtime here, but Orlando will have onemore shot at it.
- 11:20: Another great inbound play from Van Gundy, and that should have been a foul on Varejo.
- 11:23: Mike Brown just praised Varejo, but here really should be thanking the official for blowing that one. NBA officiating…it’s FAN-tastic.
- 11:27: Fati makes cowards of us all, even LeBron – he’s turned it over quite a bit down the stretch. It appears that he is afraid to attack Howard at the rim after the pick and roll.
- 11:30: Another turnover from James leads to a Orlando bucket this one might beover.
- 11:38: Two observations about that last play with 8 seconds left. Michael Jordan would have been shooting a FT’s right there…on the other hand, MJ would have never turned the ball over like Lebron has in the overtime-in fact, MJ wouldn’t be in overtime right now, they would have won it in regulation. Just fuel for the debate.
- 11:41: Amazingly enough, Orlando has left the door open again. Lebron hits a huge three and then Rashard Lewis bricks the first free throw. Can Lebron do it again? 11:44: Orlando wins! Great finish to a great ball game. I agree with Doug Collins for once everyone in Orlando held their breath on that last shot by James…you had a feeling that it might go in once it left his hand. Orlando takes a 3-1 lead in the series.

Ecumenical Taize Services planned

Under the leadership of the Highlands Ministerial Association, five area churches will host Taize Prayer Services during the months of June, July, and August. The services will be held every Thursday at 5:30 pm, rotating from church to church each week.

Taize is a form of ecumenical prayer that is practiced by many Christian traditions. It is a means to reconciliation and peace among the people of God. The services will include scripture readings, Taize music, silent meditation on the Word of God, and prayers of intercession and praise.

Taize originated in France in 1940 when a Protestant monk began providing refuge to Jews and others fleeing the Nazis. It grew into an ecumenical community of Catholic and Protestant monks. Today the Taize community seeks reconciliation between divided Christians. Each year thousands of believers from around the globe make pilgrimages to Taize, France, to pray.

The Ministerial Association seeks to bring people of faith together to give glory to our God through these beautiful prayer services. Everyone is invited to attend.

The schedule for the first five weeks of services is:

- June 4: Episcopal Church of the Incarnation
- June 11: Our Lady of the Mountains Catholic Church
- June 18: Holy Family Lutheran Church
- June 25: First Presbyterian Church
- July 2: United Methodist Church

The schedule for the remaining Taize services will be available and published in June.

Sheriff Holland said this would enable his deputies to issue warnings citations which will get people to the idea of an animal ordinance. Dangerous animals will continue to be picked up by the Sheriff's Department and taken to the Humane Society until the county's animal shelter is opened. "But those cases have been extremely rare," said Holland.

Archers said the county's spay and neuter program has worked very well and is the only sure-fire way to keep the stray animal populations in check.

Lottery Funds

Finance Director Evelyn Southard suggested the county take its allotted lottery funds — which the county has not yet done — before the state decides to withdraw the funds or "raid them" as Commissioner Brian McClelland said.

Lottery funds can only be used for schools and as such the county has planned to use them to service school construction and renovation debt.

"We appropriated $237,000 in this year's budget, but I suggest you go ahead and appropriate $443,000 — before it's gone," she said. "It's been accumulating in the fund because we haven't used it, but now we need it."

She said if the county takes the money now it will be disbursed as a debt service payment next year.

DOT committee

The commission also appointed a Comprehensive Transportation Plan Steering Committee to help identify local DOT road projects throughout the county.

At the urging of Ryan Sherby with DOT, the 13-member board representing the county, the town of Franklin and the town of Highlands, will ID road work which he will then present as part of a 30-county work list to the state.

Holland said Governor Perdue has requested road work be decided this way to make those decisions less political and to "take the decision making out of smoke filled back rooms."

"Read work decisions will now be made in a transparent manner and instead of being politically driven, and will be based on a scientific approach," he said.

Audubon Society sponsoring Eco-Tour

Highlands is an ideal time to observe these magnificent birds. While the males are nesting, males can be heard calling within their territories, their species specific songs attract mates and define boundaries. "Colors are vibrant and calls will be sharp during nesting season," says Shure.

The Highlands Plateau Audubon Society is one of nine chapters in the state and is active in our community which is home to more than 160 species of birds. Few regions outside the tropics offer such opportunities for observing and enjoying the benefits of such a unique ecosystem. Shure explains, "The Plateau has been designated as an Important Bird Area by state, national and international bird conservation organizations. We have three trails that are used specifically for observing and enjoying the benefits of our bird population."

On Thursday, June 4th the public will have an opportunity to explore one of those trails and learn more about our local bird population as the Highlands Plateau Audubon Society will partner with Highlands-Cashiers Land Trust and lead a birding Eco Tour. Lunch will be included on this moderate hike. Eco Tours are free to HCLT members and only a $25 donation for new friends which includes the guided hike, lunch and a HCLT membership. For more details and to reserve your space call HCLT at 526-1111.

Businesses can also participate in the program by purchasing an Eco Tour gift certificate for $75 which includes the guided hike, lunch, and a HCLT membership. For more details and to reserve your space call HCLT at 526-1111.

Oval to two restrooms and four alternates including Alt. 1 - Kitchen Lighting Replacement; Alt. 2 - Add an additional section to rear canopy installation (car rider area); Alt. 3 - Install sidewalk/Exterior Lighting and Alt. 4 - Install Front Entry & Canopy for Bus Loading Area.

Terry Bell, director of auxiliary services, who has been facilitating the school district's construction and renovations countywide, said everything slated for Highlands School is important particularly the installation of the front entry and canopy for bus loading.

His department will look at county growth projections geographically and demographically and suggest the county have a plan in writing, so when the final decision is made it can be backed up by a plan that has been in the works rather than a spur of the moment idea.

Representing Highlands is Commissioner Dennis DeWolf and Zoning Administrator and Planner Joe Cooley.

Other committee appointments were OK'd including Mike Bryson and Allen Bryson representing Highlands ETJ on the Planning Board and Tony Potter representing Highlands ETJ on the Zoning Board.

Though the number of times committee members can serve their allotted terms has been abolished, term lengths still apply and the county commission will continue to decide if a person can continue to sit on a board after his or her term is up.

Both the ETJ Planning Board and ETJ Zoning Board are four-year. Commissioners said in the future they plan to be more diligent about publicizing upcoming openings on boards by using an E-Newsletter broadcasted via the website.
Butterfly release set for Friday, May 29 at Highlands School

Come to the butterfly garden at Highlands School May 29th at 11:20ish (weather permitting) to see Stephanie Smathers and her 6th grade science students release the Painted Lady butterflies they raised in the classroom.

Each spring the Mountain Garden Club orders Painted Lady larvae (caterpillars) and larvae food so the 6th grade science students at Highlands School can learn about metamorphosis in the classroom. Students set up the larvae and watch them grow, spin cocoons, and emerge as adult butterflies. Then students release the adult butterflies in the butterfly garden.

MGC started the butterfly garden in 1995 with an initial grant from Shell Oil Company’s PETALS (Protect the Environment through Action, Learning and Service) program. The project transformed a barren roadside patch to a lush garden that features many native plants. The garden is a hands-on outdoor lab for 6th grade science students to learn about butterflies, gardening, and conservation.

MoreshalamandersliveintheSouthernAppalachiansthananywhereelseonearth. However, because salamanders are most active at night, many people have never seen these fascinating little amphibians in the wild. Now here’s your chance! Because most salamanders respire through their skin, they feed mainly at night when the air humidity is higher to avoid drying out. Even aquatic salamanders will often venture out of streams onto the land at night in search of abundant insect prey. If you go out with a flashlight after dark, especially after it has rained, you will often see many salamanders roaming about in the leaves in search of food.

On Saturday, May 30th the Highlands Nature Center will provide such an opportunity with its sixth annual “Salamander Meander.” Bring your flashlight and listen to a slide presentation, followed by an interpretive night hike with herpetologists to search for these magnificent creatures along the Biological Station’s Garden trails. Rain brings them out, so come prepared! Meet at the Nature Center at 9:00 a.m. Ages 7 to adult, and advanced registration and a fee of $5 per person are required due to limited space. To reserve your spot, please call the Nature Center at 526-2623.

Elaborate Highlands gardens showcased in annual Mountains in Bloom festival

Expansive mountain vistas with woodland trails, elaborate cottage gardens full of wonder and delight, and access to the majestic Highlands Falls waterfall are just a few of the treats in store at the annual Mountains in Bloom garden festival.

Set for July 7–11, Mountains in Bloom offers far more than a garden tour for its 800-plus attendees: lectures, a flower show and photography competition, a home and garden shop and a Giverny-themed Patrons Party round out the lineup. But festival-goers keep coming back for the landscapes that continue to wow year after year.

The garden tour portion of the festival will be Friday and Saturday, July 10 and 11, with four different tour times: Friday morning, Friday afternoon, Saturday morning and Saturday afternoon. Seven mountain gardens are featured in this year’s tour, five of them in Highlands Falls Country Club:
- The Langford Garden – This lovely cottage home and garden combines woodland and shaped beds that hold a variety of plant material, interspersed with boxwood, rhododendron and unusual evergreens; dissected • The Pitts Garden – Shaped by the mountain upon which it sits, this garden takes advantage of the natural terrain of bog and rock. The front garden is built into the granite hillside and is filled with perennials, while the back gardens feature a “see through” design enabling one to look through the home to fabulous vistas including Whiteside and Shortoff mountains. The hardscape includes massive granite boulders. The garden is mostly vertical and uses a Japanese touch to infuse a sense of serenity.
- The Trevathan Garden – This mountain-clinging home boasts gardening niches, among them approximately one half mile of woodland trails. Two atriums are home to River Birch, Japanese maple, numerous hydrangeas, St. John’s Wort and butterfly bush along with a rock fountain. The front yard includes a rose trellis framed by wild flowers and a waterfall and pond.
- The Demetriou Garden – Nestled into a lush Highlands setting of native laurel and rhododendron, this informal cottage style garden features woodland natives mixed with boxwood, spures and Japanese Maples, plus life size plant sculptures and collections of plants and unique bird houses that delight the eye.

PseudoCube©

by Pete Sarjeant and Don Cook

THE SETUP:
The cube has 27 consecutive numbers in it, arranged in three layers with 9 numbers each. These numbers are arranged in a special pattern: For each layer, the sum of the three numbers in each row, column or diagonal, is 3 times its center number. Eight diagonals connect all 3 layers by running through the center number of the middle layer. Each diagonal contains 3 numbers equalling the total of the three center numbers. One of the diagonals is shown with circles.

THE CHALLENGE:
Start with the three center numbers for each layer and the other numbers given. Now pour a cup of coffee, pick up a pencil and eraser and try to figure out where the other numbers belong. Good Luck!

A year to the day, the bridge opens at The Bascom

Memorial Day 2008 the community turned out for the bridge pull by horse and oxen. Memorial Day 2009 the community turned out to see the bridge opened to vehicular traffic.

From left, Dian Winingder, Dorothy Coleman, Bascom Chairman Bob Fisher and Tom Winingder cut the ribbon to open the Will Henry Stevens Bridge. The bridge is the new entrance to The Bascom’s six-acre visual art center, and funds from the Winingder-Coleman family made it possible.

Alan Lewis gives bridge donor Dorothy Coleman, front passenger, and in back from left The Bascom Chairman Bob Fisher, bridge donor Dian Winingder and Highlands Town Mayor Don Mullen a ride across the new Will Henry Stevens Bridge. Lewis’ car was the first vehicle to cross the bridge.

All this profit in credit cards, not to mention sub-prime mortgages, also meant that banks had an incentive to push people to spend and spend. I'm sure every reader of this column has been deluged with credit card offers for years. Even as late as last year, issuers sent 4.2 billion credit card offers in the mail. This number is down from the peak of 6.1 billion in 2005, but still nearly four times as many as the 1.1 billion sent in 1990.

Americans were happy to spend, but because our domestic manufacturing base had become so withered due to lack of investment, the buying spree wasn't spent on domestically made goods. We were buying from China and the rest of the world. Our economy has been hollowed out by a financial sector that helped to stifle manufacturing. Honest pursuits, as Geoghegan calls the production of goods, could not compete with the profits of finance.

Earlier this year I heard an economist talking about the stimulus package. He said that the dollars spent in the 1930s on New Deal programs did more to stimulate the economy than a dollar today, because in the 1930s over 90 percent of the goods purchased in this country were manufactured here. Now less than 50 percent of that stimulus money will actually be spent here.

There's a sad story in the May 18th New Yorker (“The Death of Kings,” by Nick Paumgarten) about many money managers and traders who knew something was wrong with the financial system, but couldn't resist the pressure to produce double-digit returns, and ended up being big losers themselves. My husband and I had a small amount of money to invest a few years ago. We looked at investing in the stock market, but I thought it was a casino and instead we bought CDs at 5 percent. At the time people laughed at us for being happy with such small returns, but a year ago they stopped laughing.

By Ryan Potts

The Highlands Rotary Club sponsored the Highlands High School Athletic Banquet on Tuesday night at the Civic Center to honor all Highlander athletes from the 2008-09 school year.

Highlands High School students and their families were treated to fellowship, hamburgers and hot dogs, music and a video slideshow of Highlander athletics prior to the awards portion of the evening.

Highlands High School coaches then presented awards for Sportsmanship, Highlander Pride, Most Improved and Most Valuable Player plaques to students in front of friends and family. After the individual sporting awards were presented, there were several special awards given in the final portion of the awards ceremony.

Highlands Varsity Men's Soccer Coach Chris Green was presented with the Smoky Mountain Conference Coach of the year award after leading the Highlanders to an undefeated SMC championship.

The Fan(s) of the year award (voted on by Highlands High students) was also presented to David and Sammie Loeffler, who were recognized for their outstanding support of Highlander athletics throughout this year and years past.

Seniors Ezra Herz, Luke McNeill, Taylor Parrish, Hunter Loeffler, Mikey Lica, Alex Hedden, Andrew Billingsly, Michael Baty, Carolyn Hornsby and Marisol Ruiz were then honored for their contributions to Highlands High School throughout the past four years at the conclusion of the ceremony.

Highlands School, the Booster Club, the athletes and the individual coaches would like to thank the Highlands community for their monetary and physical support this year as we close the book on 2008-09 and move forward towards the 2009-10 season.
