Board OKs new plans for K-H Park

As last week’s Town Board meeting came to a close, a proposal for the Kelsey-Hutchinson Park sparked discussion that ended in a 3 to 2 vote.

King Young, a member of the original Pine Street Park Committee, which began a fundraising campaign to purchase the property and solicited ideas from the public for the park’s purpose and design, said the Highlands-Cashiers Land Trust, the entity that eventually purchased the property before giving it to the town, has $30,000 left over to spend. With the stormwater mitigation work in the park coming to an end, the Land Trust is now ready to make the park into something citizens envisioned at no cost to the town.

“The primary purpose is to beautify the park with more grass and less asphalt and to promote safety for people trying to cross the street from one section of the park to the other from between parked cars,” said Young.

County to own Hudson Library building

With both the Macon County Library Board and the Hudson Library Board behind the idea, the county could own the Hudson Library building in Highlands.

“The purpose of entering into negotiations concerning the transfer of property is to ensure the renovation and future expansion of the building meets the needs for library services in Highlands, per recent needs assessment study,” said president of the Hudson Library Board, Robert E. Smith at Monday’s Macon County Commission meeting.

He said instead of the Hudson Library operating as a separate facility, it just makes sense for it to be part of the Fontana/Macon County system.

The library has operated as part of the Fontana Library system for years, but the facility was not owned by the system or the county.

“The purpose is to have this relationship on paper in a resolution, so future boards have guidelines so the relationship between the Hudson and Fontana libraries is defined,” said Smith.

Highlands School ‘Fans of the Year’

At Tuesday night’s Athletic Banquet, Sam and Lisa Osteen, parents of freshman Taylor Osteen, were named “Fans of the Year” for their consistent attendance at Highlands School sports events. Coach Chris Green was named “Coach of the Year.”

Man dies in cycle accident

On Monday, May 24, a man who sustained injuries due to a motorcycle accident on U.S. 64 west near Bust Your Butt Falls died at Mission Hospital in Asheville.

At 11:25 a.m., Highlands Fire & Rescue and Macon County EMS responded to the accident where eyewitnesses say the driver of the cycle “came around the curve, lost control, slid out and wrapped. The Pennsylvania man, estimated to be in his late 30s, was riding in a pack of five or six cyclists who had come from Deals Gap - home of the six-mile stretch of curves known as Tal of the Dragon in Graham County, N.C.

EMS transported the man to the Cullasaja Church of God field in Franklin where he was picked up in the MAMA helicopter and flown to Mission Hospital where he later died.

Stakeholder surveys positive

Results are in from the 2010 Macon County School System Stakeholder Survey. In the survey, hundreds of questions were asked of staff, students, parents and the community to gauge the school system’s performance over the year.

Though the number of survey responses were up in 2009 from 2008 returns, the number of responses 2009 to 2010 waned.

Participants were asked what concerns them about the school system and what they felt was positive about the system.

The top five questions that indicated concern for the 266 staff members who participated in the survey were: there is sufficient space available for future student growth at my school; the school system receives adequate financial resources; the system employees receive competitive salaries; my school’s lunch program promotes healthy diets; and I feel comfortable offering suggestions on sharing ideas.

Monetary compensation can't undo the wrong

Dear Editor,

The last thing I want to do is to resurrect the controversy over the Bowery Road road debacle, so I transfer the honor to you, by virtue of your recent articles in your newspaper. You made several statements that, for the record, I take issue with.

First, you wrote the cases involve “12 property owners along the first 7/10ths of Bowery Road most affected by the widening and paving of the road.” “Most affected” is not only an understatement but is, with all due respect, ridiculous. These 12 property owners were the only property owners affected. Drive the full length of the Bowery Road, compare the first 7/10ths with the rest of it and see for yourself. You will note that the property owners on the rest of it lost none of their property, none of their large, old trees, none of their shade and, dare I say it, none of the “charm” of the old original road and none of the value that that charm gives to their property.

Second, you wrote “Typically, the property rises in value due to a ‘better’ road, but ‘better’ is in the eye of the beholder.” It certainly is. There are many lovely properties along the Bowery Road and, were I in the market to buy one, I would narrow my choices to those on the shady, tree-lined “charming” road and would eliminate from consideration any of the lovely properties available on a denuded, hot, weedy, sterile, and, dare I say it, ugly road. Not only is ‘better’ in the eye of the beholder, but so is value.

Third, you wrote “For some along Bowery Road, ‘compensation’ amounted to a wider, paved road versus the rutted, dirt and gravel road, but for several property owners, compensation could only come with money.” Here I will try to restrain myself, but I hardly know how or where to begin. Money is no compensation at all for the forcible loss of property, for the loss of the beautiful and plentiful old trees, the loss of abundant rhododendron and laurel that would be in full bloom all along the road right now, the loss of great charm that silly, emotional concept, I know, but one which psychologists or insinuate quality of life) that these things provided, and to suggest or insinuate as much is an insult. Those who lost these things will be “compensated” with money because it is the law. It is not something they wanted, asked for nor solicited. They would rather not have it. They would rather have their old, historic road. And as for the other property owners, you say “compensation amounted to a wider, paved road …” What do you mean? This makes no sense. What were they being compensated for? What as forcibly taken from them? What did they lose? The only thing they lost, they cannot get back, and I am not referring to a beautiful old road. You figure it out.

The Bascom’s Collective Spirits fundraiser surpassed all marks

As the final gavel rang down last Saturday evening on the 4th annual Collective Spirits wine festival to benefit The Bascom, it culminated in, what nearly everyone in attendance to whom we spoke told Harriet and me, was one of the most exciting, energizing experiences they have ever attended. It is not an understatement to say the patio of The Bascom was full of electricity and the results; to the credit of our benevolent residents and guests of the Highlands Plateau, were phenomenal. Last year’s event was a success but this year our results nearly tripled that! Assomeone mentioned to me afterwards, and our participating winemakers in fact the first of these so-called “cult” vintners (low production, private mailing list distribution only) of California’s Napa Valley. Dick Grace reminded us that it is the duty of all to support the Bascom’s outreach with one’s “time, talent, and treasure, but most important, with one’s love.” And that love poured forth all evening!
The benefactors of these funds will be the residents, especially the children and schools, who will be provided an expanded array of year-round activities and programs at little or no cost to participants. With these new funds the Bascom Board yesterday passed a resolution to form a new committee to identify, promote and implement this programming on an ever expanded scale. More to come on this in the near future!

We kicked off the weekend with a series of 4 private winemaker dinners for our sponsors and benefactors. The Highlands Plateau homes of the Butler’s, Fisher’s, Jones’ and LeCraw’s set the tone for the weekend; all were magnificent and gracious hosts of catered gourmet meals paired with vintage wines!

Wilmington Trust was our Presenting Corporate Sponsor. Silver sponsors included: Air Tran, BNY Mellon Wealth Management, Chubb/Lanigan Insurance Services, and Hennessy Automobile Companies; many participating for the first time. Bronze sponsors included: Harry Norman Realtors (Bert Mobley & Pat Allen, brokers) and Franklin Ford/Moss Robertson Cadillac. Media bronze sponsors included: Highlands Newspaper, Lauder Magazine, WNC Magazine and Wines Down South online magazine. Our sponsors over doubled their contributions from last year! These businesses and all of the attending benefactors and individual ticket purchasers represent the bedrock of our event and we can’t thank them enough.

This year we additionally retained the outside services of event planner Elizabeth Fletcher, of Do Events Atlanta, and auctioneer, Greg Quiroga, of the noted San Francisco auction firm of Reinalds & Buckley. They were the active, creative geniuses behind our success. This 3-day event had so many volunteers and was led by Laney Capron and Laura Rogers, A “Virtual Wine Group” was formed to assist with winemakers and distributors to assure the finest range of value and vintage wines.

John Rymer and Bert Mobley of Highlands led this group with hands on assistance.

Porking Miss Piggy
Can you top this?

No, this is not another of my tacky children's stories. I'm sure you've been reading to your little ones. Warning: Do not read this to children or members of the Highlands Police Department.

OK, first the disclaimer. This cruel story has nothing...I repeat, nothing to do with the current hubbub going on at the Highlands police department so don't send me a subpoena 'cause I know nothing, saw nothing and did nothing. But as that unfortunate scandal unfolds and the 'he said, she said' denials begin, my memory, what's left of it, has been dusted off to the days when I was a cop.

I am not making this up. I was working narcotics at the time when one of my detectives burst into my office and said, "Captain, you gotta go over to Criminal Records and look at the rookie class; they're getting their police ID's." When I arrived and looked over the class, I was floored.

There, standing before me was a live, breathing female replica of Miss Piggy from the Muppets fame. She even had a Miss Piggy hairstyle. Instantly, I felt sorry for her. You see, cops, including myself, sometimes act like kindergarten children and are cruel to each other. This rookie didn't know it yet, but she was in for one helluva ride.

I liked Miss Piggy because she was a good cop, except her 180 lb., 5'2" frame made her ill equipped to chase bad guys. But we were entering that era where most cops were fat and no longer chased bad guys on foot. As time passed, life started to get uglier and uglier for Miss Piggy. Worse, the Muppet Show was peaking on TV.

Each time Miss Piggy would use her microphone to broadcast anything over her radio, it was followed by a solid 30 seconds of oinks and snorting. Each day at work, her cubbyhole mailbox had a new Miss Piggy treasure. The stores were full of inexpensive Miss Piggy stuff and she had been given them all. It was getting cruel. Someone glued her face from a photograph on an oversized Miss Piggy doll, then hung it from a hangman's noose in the squad room. Then, one afternoon she went to the motor pool and found a three-foot Miss Piggy doll super-glued to the hood of her police car. The paint was ruined.

Wait, it gets worse. One morning, the chief ordered all unit leaders to his office for a meeting. He arrived late and found his office full of police brass. In the corner, sat Miss Piggy with tears dried on her cheeks. The room grew quiet. Then the chief spoke. "Alright, I've had enough. The harassment of this young lady must stop and I mean right now. If I find out who did this, they're fired." Then the chief opened his desk drawer and pulled out a bloody rag containing a cut off pig's foot. "This was in her mailbox," the chief said sternly.

The chief assured Miss Piggy that a special person would be assigned to investigate the pig's foot caper. Funny, there was only one cop on our department who owned a pig farm so I guess I'd start there. Anyway, when Miss Piggy left the office, the chief burst out in laughter, pointing to the bloody pig's foot and said, "Is that the funniest thing you've ever seen? Who's the dumbest Lieutenant we have I can assign this investigation to?"

Who's the dumbest Lieutenant we have I can assign this investigation to?"

Once the not too bright Lieutenant was given his assignment and word went out, he was handed forty-seven signed letters of confession from officers claiming they put the pig's foot in her mailbox.

Now the tacky part; Miss Piggy couldn't file an EEOC complaint 'cause she was getting porked by a high ranking police official who shall remain nameless. A little circus music, please!

But things have a way of working themselves out, especially for Miss Piggy. The chief died in his swimming pool from a massive heart attack at the age of thirty seven. After making a spectacle of himself by throwing her body on the casket at the funeral home, she quit her job, kissed her high ranking police official goodbye and filed an EEOC complaint, raking in a small fortune. The EEOC board was not impressed that Miss Piggy was sleeping with a police official goodbye and filed an EEOC complaint, raking in a small fortune. The ‘trappings’ of civilization

Several years ago, I took a raft trip through the Grand Canyon. The raft had a plywood deck that might have measured 18’x24’, so it shouldn’t be confused with a kayak. The flat deck was mounted on six inflatable Army surplus pontoons. There was ample room for several passengers and a small mountain of supplies. The supplies rode along to guarantee that our every need and wish might be satisfied. On the fifth and final day of the trip our guides served, in addition to pork chops and eggs, grapefruit halves topped with a Maraschino cherry. It was a tough trip. I’d been to Disney World, so I knew rapids.

One of the things that sold me on the trip was the idea of sipping a cold beer at dusk, after a long day of shooting rapids, resting in the maw of the Grand Canyon, looking up at a cloudless sky. To do that required both beer and a refrigerant. We bought the beer shortly before starting down river. One of the guys, who seemed to be a veteran, told us we could chill the beer in the cold river water. He suggested a bag and stout rope. We hung the bag over the stern and headed down river. Somewhere between Glen Canyon Dam and our camp site, we lost our sack to the river. But this is not a sad story.

The presence of the Mason Couch family from Chicago, or maybe it was Minneapolis, guaranteed an extraordinary experience. Mason was a real estate developer, and proud of it. His wife, whose name I don’t remember, was an appendage, and smugly comfortable as a trophy. When Mason asked a fellow camper if he’d ever heard of Mattel Toys, the answer didn’t really matter. It was simply a way for Mason to announce that he’d brokered the deal. Mason and “What’s her name” were pretty people, and they had two lovely children. Really they had one lovely child, a tall, tanned muscular Adonis type, with a perfectly shaped nose. Their second kid was definitely the second kid. He was fat and freckled. He lacked the smooth manner with which his older brother dealt with the much older fellow travelers. They seemed at best an inconvenience to his parents, at worst an embarrassment. They seemed puzzled that he had sprung from their patrician seed.

It was an unwritten rule that the passengers helped unload the gear when we

It’s been awhile, but how about some random thoughts?

Czech Republic 4, USA 2 in a little friendly tune up for the World Cup. Our defense was putrid and Oguchi Onyewu looked like he had rushed back from injury. That kind of defense will get the US on the wrong end of a blowout in the opener against England.

Speaking of US vs. England, we definitely need a catchy name for this game. The whole "Tea Party" thing has been ruined by the recent protestors who have adopted the name, and I’m not sure that "Revolution; Part Two" has the right ring to it. We are coming up on the 200th anniversary of the War of 1812 in just a few years, but I’m not sure how we can tie that in either.

One more note on the World Cup. Fernando Torres cut his hair, so now he looks slightly more manly despite being the best soccer player in the world. (Lionel Messi, Wayne Rooney and Ronaldo would beg to differ with the previous statement)

Phoenix has tied up their series with the Lakers by taking a page straight out of the Men’s League handbook. If you are facing a team that has a superstar or two, play zone and force the other guys to beat you. Kobe has been spectacular in the last two games, but the other Lakers have been unable to step up and Phoenix now has all the momentum after a game 4 victory that saw their bench score 54 points.

Meanwhile, Orlando salvaged their season on Monday night, but faced elimination last night at home. How did the game turn out? While I cannot predict the future, I can without a doubt say that Orlando must get more production out of $16 million dollar men Vince Carter and Rashard Lewis. Both have been absolutely (Bill Walton voice) hoooorrrible in this series and forced Stan Van Gundy to go to a crunch time lineup of Jameer Nelson, JJ Redick, Matt Barnes, Brandon Bass and Dwight Howard.

Speaking of Vince Carter, has there ever been a superstar who folded under pressure worse than Vince? Alex Rodriguez used to be the gold standard for superstar chokers, but he snapped out of that in the World Series last year. The artist formerly known as Vinsanity… well when the lights shine he hides like a dog at bathtime. It’s almost sad in a way, that a guy with those physical gifts lacks mental focus and intensity. (who says God doesn’t have a sense of humor)

While I was sad to see the Montreal Canadiens fall just short of the Stanley Cup, I will not miss their ugly brand of hockey. It seems that every year we have a team that plays that junky zone trap make the finals, and Montreal would have been that team this year. I guess that while zone trapping makes for a more exciting NBA game, it makes hockey a lot less exciting.

And finally, whoever told Kevin Harlan he needed to change his announcing catchphrase to “BANG” should probably be put into an asylum. I could handle “right between the eyes” because it didn’t happen all that often… but this new one is absolutely absurd.

'I Was in the First Wave'

by John Armor

I was at breakfast on Sunday morning at the Sheraton National, in Arlington, Virginia. I was attending a conference, but could only find space in Virginia. Also, at my hotel were the members of the Iwo Jima Association.

That Association was for survivors of that battle, and for the families of those who did not survive. At the table next to me were two, older gentlemen. They were young men 60 years ago. He described how they were taking fire from enemy who were hidden in holes at all points of the compass.

I have seen many war movies. The first one to come to mind is the reality of war, such as Saving Private Ryan. That movie showed what it's like to be a man, sitting a few feet away, experiencing the war.

And I sat back and began to think. Has there ever been a time in my life, any time for any reason, that I have been in the first wave? Is there anything in my life that I have not been in the first wave? Is there anything in my life that I have not put my life on the line for its preservation?

I've never fought in a war. I have deliberately risked my life just once, in a tragic and comic dust-up with the local Mafia in Baltimore. But on the other hand, there is one subject, one goal, that has occupied the center of my life since I was a teenager. It is the Constitution of the United States.

After 45 years of working with that document, I am now certain that the essence of the Constitution is under attack. It is being attacked by people who are ignorant (mostly) or malicious (some) and if they have their way, the Constitution will die in our generation.

The actual document will survive, to be sure, in its argon-filled cases at National Archives. But the political, legal and economic results of the document will be lost. It will become only an interesting talisman to be followed by generations later. Most of the participants may be dead and gone before the results are known. So be it.

I have fought long and hard in state and federal courts, up to the US Supreme Court. And I've written, I've fought, I've spent hours, weeks and months talking with citizens, candidates, and strangers on buses, about the danger to the Constitution.

It has cost me a huge amount of money, since constitutional lawyers do not get paid at anything approaching the pay scales of lawyers who specialize in the real problems of the law-to-do. It has cost me much of my personal time, since fighting for the Constitution does not end at the close of business, nor does it take time off for weekends and federal holidays.

The said thing is that the worst of the enemies are those who ought to know better. Judges, especially federal judges, who have been on the Supreme Court are grossly incompetent if they do not understand that the Constitution is a multifaceted limitation on the powers of the federal government. Judges who do not understand that are unfit to put on a robe and step onto the bench at any level.

The other category of the enemies who ought to know better, are elected official holders. Everyone in public office takes an oath (or makes an affirmation) to respect and protect the Constitution of the United States. Anyone who has not read it, or acts like he hasn't read it, does not belong in any public office at any level.

I hope I live long enough to see this war won. But if I don't, I hope someone can justly say of me, the occasion of my Irish wake, that "I was in the first wave for the Constitution."

And in time, I hope they begin again teaching in civics class, this statement by Thomas Jefferson, "Put not your faith in man, but bind him down with the chains of the Constitution." And mind, you, that does not mean that the Constitution never changes. It changes through the Amendment Article, which George Washington called "the authentic act of the whole people." A majority of the House and Senate, a majority of the Supreme Court, plus the President, do not amount to "the authentic act of the whole people."

I do not compare what I have done to the sacrifices of that man, and his companion's father, 65 years ago. I do say that it is healthy for all of us to have causes larger and outside of ourselves. And if we are fortunate, we may be found in the forefront of those worthwhile intellectual and moral battles.

hands were making light work, Mr. and Mrs. Couch blamed Dr. Bill for the tragedy and were not particularly eager to ask for his help. Realizing that none of her other questions mattered, she repeated, “Is it broken?” Bill might have smiled and answered, “It’s straight as an arrow, and if it’s straight, nothing else matters. For God’s sake, plastic surgeons intentionally break a patient’s nose. Why? To straighten it!” The Couch family would have been happy, giddy in their good fortune. Bill would have been invited for cocktails and back gammon. Therefore surely would have been less tension on board.

Instead, he answered, “Can’t be sure without an x-ray. Best thing is to keep it iced for the next two days, when we’ll be able to get out of the canyon.”

That’s when we realized that Western River Expeditions, which had tried to guarantee a perfect adventure without inconvenience or discomfort had loaded a thousand pounds of gear, but not one bag of ice.

Vacation-rental home rules to live by

Realtors hear it all the time. “We want to buy a house to rent to pay the expenses.” Can it be done? Well, yes and no – with a heavy emphasis “No.”

Since we’ve been managing rentals, I’ve only heard one owner say rental income paid his expenses. From here on, I’ll refer to him as Billy Buyer. First of all, he didn’t count his mortgage as rental house expenses. He was referring to property taxes, insurance, utilities, repairs, maintenance, property management fees and commissions.

Rule #1: Make sure your rental home is one you want in an area you want. You may be able to find a “great deal” for a house, but if that house only appeals to a small percentage of buyers, the same rule applies to renters.

Example: Billy Buyer bought a lot with the intention of placing a rental home on it - a home in which he and his wife would retire, or at least spend a major portion of their years.

Rule #2: When considering a home to buy for rental purposes, look at it as if you yourself were coming to stay in a vacation rental. Things that you like about a house for sale will be some of the same things rental prospects will look for as well -- view, walk to town, water features, good and clean ceilings, walls and floors, updated kitchens/baths, fireplaces, outdoor activities, etc.

Billy Buyer bought and built on his lot, which was close to town, and had some quality custom features -- vaulted ceilings, wood floors, nicestone fireplace, larger than normal bedrooms, etc., and then furnished the home with calm modern colors, an eclectic mixture of antiques and new, but comfortable furnishings.

Rule #3: Furnish it with “Like not Love.” When looking at a home to buy that is being sold unfurnished, don’t fall in love with the furnishings unless you intend to pay more than the asking price.

Instead, take notes and pictures and reimagine what’s there.

Renters that pay vacation rental prices in Highlands are used to nice things and they will take care of them. (It’s a misnomer that rental homes get trashed, or badly damaged from the use of multiple renters.) You probably don’t want to put in an original Van Gogh, but fill it with items you “Like,” items that are distinctive, but not irreplaceable.

Rule #4: Decide who will manage and market your rental home. There are several management companies in Highlands; there are also websites geared to help homeowners rent their own homes with no management. If you go that route, you will be responsible for finding needed vendors (cleaners, plumbers, yard maintenance, etc. and paying the county and state taxes required).

In the early 1500s, Philippus Aureolus Theophrastus Bombastus von Hohenheim, known as Paracelsus, was a Swiss-Austrian physician and botanist, alchemist and astrologer. His experiments eventually determined which doses of mercurials and arsenicals would produce a therapeutic effect without killing the patient. This was 120 years after Gutenberg invented movable type printing, but two hundred years earlier still, the Chinese, who had invented printing long ago, had already acquired a highly evolved pharmacology using plants, minerals, and other naturally-occurring substances, sometimes including animal parts.

By the year 1200 in China, thousands of medicinal materials had been catalogued and classified according to their taste (sour, bitter, sweet, acrid, salty, astringent), their temperature effect on the body (cold, cool, neutral, warm, hot), and which one or more of the twelve channels of acupuncture they entered: lung, large intestine, small intestine, spleen, stomach, bladder, kidney, xin bao, san jiao — the latter two being terms it takes paragraphs to translate — gall bladder, liver. Each of the thousands of substances with its proper dosage, observable effects and side effects had been recorded. How to prepare each substance for best safety and efficacy, how each substance acted in combination with any of the others, and the method of combining a number of substances to achieve a well-balanced formula were all well understood.

Some commonly used formulas were already more than a thousand years old (and are still used today). This advanced system of pharmacology existed alongside another major scientific tradition of medicine — acupuncture — sometimes in rivalry, sometimes in cooperation. All this medical knowledge was thoroughly documented in a literate, scientific tradition going back to the fifth century before the Common Era. By the time Gutenberg invented movable type, more than 40,000 volumes on the science of medicine had been published in China.

In December of 1799, George Washington had a fever and throat infection, which turned into pneumonia. The pneumonia didn’t kill him, but mercury medicine gave him kidney failure, and after five pints of blood-letting, his doctors had done him in. In China of the same era, doctors all over the land had known for more than 1,500 years just how to safely treat pneumonia with a high success rate, and better yet, how to prevent a fever and sore throat from progressing to pneumonia in the first place.

To see how this could be possible, you have to understand that in all of Western history, there has never been a period of more than 3 or 400 years when social and political structures remained the same. There were centuries when scientific literature was lost; periods of regression instead of progress. But in China, when ruling dynasties changed, the social and political structures remained essentially the same for 2,500 years. Literacy and scholarship was encouraged throughout that time.

I don’t know what American children learn in school these days, but when I took world history in high school, we had maybe one chapter on China. It was all about what the colonial powers did there, the Dutch East India Company, the British East India Company, wars after that, later the communist revolution, then China selling Migs to the North Koreans, China supplying the Vietnamese. There were reasons not to give us anything to admire about China.

But in 1954, at Cambridge, Joseph Needham published the first of 27 volumes of Science and Civilization in China, and suddenly scholars discovered a society more advanced than the West. In many aspects throughout most of its history, at least until the European invasions, China had invented gunpowder and fireworks a long time ago, even trying to land a man on the moon a few centuries before Dutch mariners came. (That’s a funny story for some other time.) But the West learned to use gunpowder propellant for superior long arms and cannons, forcing China to submit for a time to Western exploitation of trade, because the Europeans controlled the seas. Just as everywhere else the colonizers went, the conquered country found its level of prosperity reduced, poverty and melancholy on the rise. China developed an inferiority complex. It also developed what we now call “Stockholm syndrome,” when hostages begin to sympathize with their captors. China began, slowly, to envy the West, wanted to be like the West.

Later, because of that inferiority complex and envy, China would adopt so much Westernization that the original Chinese medicine was almost lost. Happily, social, cultural, and economic forces brought a resurgence of Chinese medicine today.

We Know That Trust is Earned Not Given …
That’s Why We’re Working to Earn Yours.

At Highlands-Cashiers Hospital, no one demands more of us than we do of ourselves. From our nursing professionals to our maintenance staff, from our board certified physicians to our support service teams, we strive to perform at the highest level. Many of you have written to thank us for what you called the highest caliber of service, like Mr. & Mrs. Omar Adams who wrote:

“We were so impressed with every facet of the hospital staff and operations. We gratefully thank all of the nurses, therapists and Doctors Moore, Matthews and Plauche’. We are full time residents in our seventies. What a relief to have such a wonderful facility so close to us.”

No matter where you come from, we take the same caring approach to your health. David Mottley from Louisville wrote:

“I recently was a guest at Mountain Top and became ill with a kidney stone. A friend who I was vacationing with suggested that I go to Highlands-Cashiers Hospital for treatment. While there, I received exemplary care from your staff in the Emergency Room. Everyone went above and beyond to make me comfortable and was very gracious to my family.”

It is our fondest hope that as we continue to install the latest in diagnostic equipment, add to our staff of Board Certified Physicians and assure that our nursing care continues to be highly rated, that you will make us your first choice in healthcare providers. We look forward to greeting you and demonstrating why these patients took the time to write us. So visit our web site at www.highlandscashiershospital.org to learn more, or just come by and see us.

Musical services in June at Christ Anglican

Christ Anglican Church will host a special musical service on June 6 at 9 a.m., featuring four professional instrumentalists and two accomplished vocalists who will augment the church’s 1928 Book of Common Prayer liturgy with portions from J.S. Bach’s Mass in G Major.

The four instrumentalists are violinist Monique Pinelli, who plays with the Asheville Lyric Opera; violist and violinist Elizabeth Terry of Asheville, who is the music director of Asheville Symphony; and cellist Eric Scheider, who is a member of the Hendersonville Symphony.

The members of Christ Anglican Church and their rector Jim Murphy invite the communities and surrounding areas of Highlands and Cashiers to hear these six talented musicians and participate in this worshipful musical and liturgical service.

Christ Anglican Church meets in the facilities of Whiteside Presbyterian Church, Highway 64, Cashiers. For more information, call Christ Anglican at 828-743-1701.

Highlands Playhouse opens season with ‘Smokey Joe’s Cafe - June 17-July 3

By Joseph Litsch

Back in the 1950s music business insiders who first saw and heard a handsome, hip-shaking singer from Tupelo, MS, just knew he was headed for stardom. Everything, it seemed, that he touched — or in his case, sang — turned gold.

Such was the case with a little song, written by a couple of struggling New York songwriters Jerry Leiber and Mike Stoller, whose works are celebrated in a season-opening musical revue at the Highlands Playhouse, “Smokey Joe’s Cafe.” Under the direction of Sam Dunaway, it opens June 17 and runs through July 3, Tuesday-Sunday.

Leiber and Stoller, both Jewish, learned heavily toward rhythm 'n' blues, gospel and blues, and they were early aware of a new musical sprout called rock 'n' roll. Trying to find, or rather, make their place in the musical world, they shied away from nothing. Their subject matter was unbelievably varied. Take that little song, for example, “Hound Dog” recorded by Big Mama Thornton, a blues belter with deep-rooted gospel influences. Big Mama’s “Hound Dog” was a moderate hit in some circles, and Leiber and Stoller were happy.

But, three years later, 1956, when Elvis Presley literally put his twist on “Hound Dog” — well, BOOM! Through the roof. And the names Leiber and Stoller were forever linked with Presley. They went on to write many songs for Presley helping his ascent to stardom. Everything, it seemed that he touched — or in his case, sang — turned gold.

Presley was the most notable singer to record Leiber-Stoller works, but there also were the Coasters, the Shangri-Las, The Dixie Cups and others who introduced their works. In fact, the Coasters recorded 24 Leiber-Stoller songs that made the top 40 charts. Best known from that double dozen are “Yakety Yak,” “Searchin’,” “Charlie Brown,” “Poison Ivy,” “Along Came Jones,” and “Little Egypt.” They’re all being served up in “Smokey Joe’s Cafe.”

These songwriters are generally regarded as the cornerstone of rock ‘n’ roll music, and they were huge influences on those who followed in their footsteps, such as Carole King, John Lennon and Paul McCartney and all those at Motown. Many listeners who know only their music are surprised to learn that Leiber and Stoller are white.

They were also quite innovative in their instrumentation. Take the song, “Their Eyes Were Watching God” recorded by the Drifters back in 1959.

For the first time, string instruments were used the same way saxophones had been used until then, playing solo riffs and adding a major production value. And the range of songs this duo wrote is staggering — from hardcore rock ‘n’ roll to ballad-like R&B to rousing gospel numbers. Just try to sit still during “Saved,” which closes the first act. In all, there are 39 selections from the Leiber-Stoller songbook. And...no talking, just singing — often some pure old-fashioned “sang ng.” Leiber and Stoller have been recognized by virtually ever award available to songwriters. They have even have a star on Hollywood’s Walk of Fame. And, in 1988 Elvis Presley’s recording of Leiber and Stoller’s “Hound Dog” was chosen for the Grammy Hall of Fame.

How do you stand for something?

Rev. Brian Sullivan
The Episcopal Church of the Incarnation

Many of you may know I do some of my best pastoral work at Buck’s coffee shop. I call it a ministry of “intentional loitering.” One particular afternoon I began a conversation about the Middle East with some wonderful women. It was not my typical afternoon coffee hour discussion. There were two very atypical things that happened. The first is that it was a conversation, not a monologue or sermon or diatribe. It was an honest to goodness exchange of ideas. The other strange occurrence was the level of respect each of us had for each other. There was no name calling, demonizing, categorizing, and not even one raised voice. What was normal is that we all had different opinions (some very strong) about the things we were discussing.

At one point, I was asked an interesting question. I had just described my role as the director of Kids4Peace, as someone who “loves in the fire.” A shorter definition would be peacemaker. The question was raised, “How do you stand for something, especially as a Christian, if you are a peacemaker?” Like a good rabbi, I turned the question back on the person. But upon reflection, my answer has something to do with my religious DNA. You may be familiar with these words in your own religious DNA: “Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, love your neighbor as yourself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.”

In allowing these words to take action, I am aware it is a far cry from sitting on the fence or waiting to see what will happen. Instead it takes action. In order to love your neighbor, you must be able to “walk a mile in their shoes.” This is very different than tolerating differences. It is very different than sitting on the fence. This kind of love starts with respect, which leads us down a very dangerous road of compassion. I say “dangerous” because if you have this level of compassion you put yourself in very familiar shoes (or sandals, in this case). It was Jesus who walked in our shoes, “even unto death.” How did he do it? “He was oppressed and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth.” In other words, he listened, respected and had compassion on everyone he came across. Through these actions, he came up with a new way—a way which was more truthful and gave more life than any previous way.

As 21st century Disciples of Christ, now more than ever, we must take a stand and follow the way, the truth and the life. We are in the midst of very contentious times both politically and theologically. So I invite everyone to come sit in the fire.

This week when someone says something that seems so unbearable to understand, open not your mouth. Do more than tolerate him or her. Try to understand the person, not the words. See what happens when you lower your anxiety in the face of a “hard-nosed conservative diatribe” or “bleeding heart liberal sermon.” And see if there is not something within that person that resembles the person we all seek. Because if you try to match barb with barb, you have given up an incredible opportunity to take a stand for what Jesus stood for – bringing light into the darkness. Or as another theologian once said, “Where there is no love, put love, and you will find it.”

As followers of the Risen Christ, our battle cry is not “chose a side and stick to it”, or “stand up, stand up and declare you’re either with me or against me.” Our battle cry is Alleluia, Alleluia – Christ is Risen! But be careful. This stand may lead you into an incredibly hot fire, but it may also enable you to catch a glimpse of Christ standing right before your eyes in the face of someone you least expect. Suddenly, you may find yourself on a new path, a new way, and living a new life.

Hospital's board of directors hold BBQ cookout for employees during ‘National Hospital Week’

To show appreciation for all the dedicated staff at HCH, the Board of Directors hosted and served an outside BBQ Cookout last Wednesday. Staff and volunteers were invited to join the festivities in celebration of National Hospital Week. Members from HCH Board of Directors dished up burgers, hotdogs, and ice cold beverages.

National Hospital Week, serves as a special week for the public to thank and show gratitude to their community healthcare professionals. Throughout National Hospital Week, individuals and organizations come together to promote and increase awareness of the individuals who make our healthcare industry successful. "Each and every staff member plays a vital role, and we give our utmost thanks to all," said Charlie Sheehan, Hospital Board of Directors Chairman. "Our Board of Directors, like most hospital boards, can tend to get wrapped up in the issues we deal with on a daily basis. We need to keep in mind that the quality healthcare services delivered to the communities we serve are delivered not by the Board but by our extraordinary, talented group of physicians, nurses and staff. Last week’s cookout was a great opportunity for us to interact with many of them and to express our appreciation for all the tremendous work they do. We are indebted to Francis Oakley who was the driving force behind the affair," said Sheehan.

Hospital hosts noted cardiologists

Highlands-Cashiers Hospital hosted the annual Cardiology Conference/Highlands Panel Discussion, presented by Asheville Cardiology Associates and MAHEC (Mountain Area Health Education Center), last Thursday for all medical staff members.

Guest speakers at the conference included cardiologists, Dr. Brian H. Asbill, Dr. William T. Maddox, and Dr. William W. Wharton, III, all of whom are members of the consulting medical staff at Highlands-Cashiers Hospital. The panel discussion topics included Lipid and Cholesterol Management, Anticoagulation Management, Atrial Fibrillation, Chest Pain, and Coronary Intervention. “This was a very informative round table discussion of the cardiac issues we frequently encounter in the community hospital setting. The end result was very effective in helping us manage our patients in an emergency situation. It was also reaffirming to hear that they too feel that many of these non-emergent problems are best handled in the community hospital setting,” said Dr. David Wheeler, Chief of the Medical Staff.

The education session met the criteria to qualify for one hour of certified medical education toward physicians’ requirements to maintain their board certification. The North Carolina Medical Board requires an average of 50 hours of continuing educational credits each year, depending on specialty. These keen physicians who attended the session expressed appreciation to Asheville Cardiology and MAHEC for this convenient learning opportunity to keep current and up to date on the latest techniques and treatments as well as the time to share professional knowledge and interact with each other.

“Conferences such as this one help our physicians keep pace with current healthcare demands and those demands benefit all patients. The training has not only increased trust with employees and staff but also with the patients. We value the high caliber of our medical staff as we strive daily to provide the best quality healthcare to our community,” said Frank Leslie, VP of Operations.

About Highlands-Cashiers Hospital

“HCH is a community hospital that provides diagnostic, surgical and acute patient care to the public through on-site professional services, or as a referral to regional support providers. Our emergency care facility is Stafied 24/7 and treats patients promptly, monitoring their visit with personal care and attention. We make the extra effort to assure that you get "best of class", and feel "special" every time you pass through our doors. HCH also provides Physician Clinics, a skilled Nursing Facility, Hospice Care, Skilled Rehabilitation, and Medically-Based Wellness Programs allowing individuals and families nearby access to professional care in these critical areas. The hospital continues to expand its programs to provide the public the broadest possible range of quality healthcare. Our Board-Certified Physician Staff continues to grow to better serve you, as do our medical specialties now covering 14 areas of healthcare, specialties usually only found in much larger facilities. We continually update our range of diagnostic procedures by adding new state-of-the-art equipment.”

Our goal is to be the healthcare partner to whom you can entrust your life.

son Library and the county’s board of commission can continue,” said Commissioner Brian McClellan. “We want to work together because the library issue is a county issue.”

He said the partnership between the Hudson Library and the county mirrors the relationship between the Fontana Library system and Swain and Jackson counties and it just makes sense.

Since the Hudson Library couldn’t financially do the complete expansion as planned — eventually 25,000 sq. ft. — the county agreed to have county employees do the renovation work that will double the existing library space within the current walls of the library building.

However, that step initiated the need for the county to eventually own the facility.

The resolution was accepted unanimously saying “… the board is authorized to negotiate with Macon County for the transfer or conveyance of ownership of the building to the county in return for the county’s agreement to renovate and expand the building…”

The renovation is nearing completion and will dovetail perfectly should county funding become available for the future expansion of the building as originally planned. But due to the current economy and the tight 2010-12 county budget, County Manager Jack Horton said there’s no way to know when that will happen.

Avary Doubleday, of Highlands, who sits on the Macon County Library Board, said that advisory board passed a resolution in favor of Hudson Library’s new relationship with the county — that of a tenant — and urged the county to take the next step in funding a full blown expansion.

“To reach the level of service needed at this end of the county, they will need more space than just what the current renovation gives them,” she said.

In this very rough design, the raised, stone-paved, crosswalk and areas designated for diagonal grass parking are outlined in black. The parking spaces defined by cars in the rendition would be diagonal not straight.

The plan is two-fold – to construct as many diagonal, grass parking spaces as possible with the money – about eight for now, says Young — rather than asphalt spaces and to construct a raised crosswalk in the middle of the street to visually and physically connect one side of the park with the other while slowing down traffic on the street which bisects the park.

The wide, raised, stone-paved pedestrian walkway will be at curb level for handicapped access and traffic speed control with a three-foot ramp on either side for vehicles.

Four to six parking spaces will be eliminated on Pine Street where the crosswalk meets the curb but six new spaces are planned for Fifth Street along the park perimeter so the number of spaces in the immediate area will remain the same, said Young.

Young said the Land Trust would like to see all the parking spaces adjoining the crosswalk on both sides of Pine Street converted from asphalt to grass as money becomes available. It will take the $30,000 to build eight spaces but Young suggested a fundraising campaign for the rest of them.

He said the plan is to move the existing gazebo across the street to sit in the future pavilion area since plans to build a pavilion are on hold for now.

Mayor David Wilkes and Commissioners Buz Dotson and Gary Drake were not for the idea. Commissioner Dotson said it appears this is just a way to make the park bigger, calling it “grass creep.”

“You want to slow down traffic on a street through a park that was never big enough to be a park to start with,” said Dotson. “Plus, the vast majority of time we would need to watch for pedestrians due to events in the park, the street will be closed anyway. So we’re putting a bump in the road for what?”

The three also voiced concern over snow removal and questioned whether plows would be able to work properly with the crosswalk in the way.

But Commissioner Larry Rogers said the plows wouldn’t have a problem and Town Engineer Lamar Nix agreed.

Commissioner Dennis DeWolf made the motion to accept three points of the Land Trust proposal which will not cost the town anything. Commissioners Amy Patterson and Larry Rogers agreed. Commissioners Dotson and Drake voted no.

The fourth point – to reduce the future pavilion footprint from 16 x 32 feet (512 sq. ft.) to 16 x 24 feet (384 sq. ft.) was eliminated from the vote.

“We can discuss that at another time,” said DeWolf.

The Land Trust will begin work as soon as the stormwater mitigation project is finished. Nix said the group has an on coming and two days to engineer plans.
