Board picks new Town Manager

The Town of Highlands has made an offer to Robert A. Frye for the Town Manager position and Frye has accepted.

“I’m coming up Wednesday to meet with the mayor to finalize the details, meet the department heads and look for a home,” he said in a phone interview Monday.

Frye has more than 20 years of experience in local government. He replaces Jim Fatland, who served as Highlands first Town Manager since it changed its form of government to the Manager-Council form. Fatland was terminated July 6, 2011.

Frye was employed as the Town Administrator for the Town of Highlands-Cashiers Land Trust.

Replacement sought for McClellan

On Thursday, Dec. 1, the Macon County Commission is holding a special meeting at 8 p.m., to consider, discuss and accept the resignation of Commissioner Chairman Brian McClellan. Likely due to the Nov. 18 DWI arrest in Jackson County, near Sylva, two-term commissioner McClellan released a statement Nov. 22 explaining his resignation though he didn’t refer to the DWI arrest.

“Effective Dec. 1, I am resigning.

Sheriff Dept. investigating BOE member

Lately accusations of sexual misconduct at institutions of learning have rocked the nation and now allegations of such conduct have surfaced in Macon County.

Macon County School Board member Tommy Baldwin, who represents the Nantahala District, is under investigation due to allegations concerning inappropriate conduct.

Details concerning the allegations — the who, what, where, when, etc. — haven’t been disclosed.

“The Macon County Sheriff’s Department is aware that an allegation has been made against a school Board Member,” said Sheriff Robert Holland. “I received a complaint via a telephone call during the evening at my residence and the following day assigned a detective to the case. I will not confirm who the allegation was made against nor what the extent of the allegations is. Any member of the news media...”

dia that has reported we identified the alleged suspect did so inaccurately. We have not identified anyone and feel at this time doing so would be unprofessional as a law enforcement agency.”

At the Monday, Nov. 21 School Board meeting held at Nantahala School, Chairman Tommy Cabe read a prepared statement about the allegations. “We want to say that we are aware of allegations against a school board member, and those allegations are being investigated by the proper authorities,” read Cabe. “Be aware that this is not a tribunal and that we are not empowered or in any position to discuss these matters while they are still subject to an investigation. The school board will take no action and will have no comment on these matters until the conclusion of the investigation.”

However, at the urging of School Board member Gary Shields, School Board Attorney John Henning, Sr., verified that the person the allegations were leveled against was member Tommy Baldwin. Baldwin was not at the meeting.

Sheriff Holland said so far this is an allegation and no charges have been filed. “I remain confident that my staff will investigate this matter professionally and thoroughly. At the conclusion of our investigation and before filing any charges, if necessary, we will staff this case with the District Attorney’s Office just as we do every other case of this nature. The investigation continues,” he said.

Superintendent Dan Brigman has deferred all questions to the Sheriff’s Department.

The snowbirds are pouring into South Florida and more are on the way. By January they’ll all be here and waiting in line to get a seat at a decent restaurant will be the norm. Actually, waiting in line is common for practically everything. Oh, and the busiest intersections will require two, sometimes three, light changes to get on the other side. And they call this life in the fast lane?

But here’s the good news. If you lost your job and don’t mind working a little under your pay grade, come on down ‘cause we’ve got work, at least until May when the snowbirds leave. The weather ain’t too bad either.

Here’s a little item I’m putting in my “funny, not so funny” file… and I’m not making this up. When the little missus is reading in the same room I’m watching TV, I turn off the volume and use my headset. The other day I plopped on the couch with a sandwich and realized I forgot my headset. I decided to wait until I finished eating before jumping up. Watching TV without sound can be interesting. For several minutes I watched the police clash with citizens before I realized I wasn’t watching the violence in Cairo but the Occupy Wall Street bunch in New York. What are those people doing anyway? I agree with Newt, take a bath and get a job.

Some of the nastiest people on this planet play bridge in South Florida. Here’s the scenario: we sit down at a table with two total strangers, smile at them, say hello, and watch them completely ignore us. It happens often. Didn’t any of those people go to kindergarten?

Maximilian Kolbe Wooldridge, age three, my youngest Florida grandson, is the most likable, lovable, generous person I’ve ever met. He willingly gave up his new cherished Spiderman boots to my youngest son’s wife, Lisa, a woman he hardly knew because she lives in Dubai. Max doesn’t give up his boots to just anyone. He’s sleeping with the stupid things. I hope Max doesn’t ever learn to play bridge ‘cause they’ll eat him alive.

Max is named after a Polish Franciscan Friar who willingly gave up his life when the Nazis were about to put a Jewish father of three children to death. He never met the man and gave up his life for a stranger. My little Max may just have that kind of generosity.

Our daughter, her naval commander husband and my four grandchildren are moving from Virginia Beach back to Mayport in Jacksonville, Florida. The little missus and I are elated because the navy base is only a few hours from where we live. Of course, I have to cheat a little with the speed to get there in four hours. We are sad they weren’t with us for Thanksgiving. (Are you falling asleep yet? No? Then I’ll keep going.)

The little missus and I are also elated...

Fred Wooldridge

Details are blurred but feeling is vivid

Was it the 22nd or 23rd? Not as bad as “Was it Houston or Dallas?” but proof of erosion of a memory once believed indelible.

In the ’80s, freshman classes who had no recollection of President Kennedy’s assassination entered the nation’s universities. To those of us who recalled the event in photographic detail their arrival marked the coming of a new generation.

Forty eight years ago President Kennedy was murdered in Dallas. Historians have debated how our country might have been different had he survived, but one thing was certain; those of us who were alive that day would never forget where we were when we heard the news of his shooting. I still remember where I was, but last week I was uncertain of the date. My memory has changed, faded through the years. I remember I was standing in the aisle of a medical school lecture hall. David Crowe, or maybe it was David King, had heard the story returning from lunch.

For years I remembered every detail of the moment and of the hours and days that followed. The memory has faded, like an old photo left in the sun. I no longer know if I remember the day’s events as much as their repeated recitation through the years. The lecturer said that we would be forced to deal with life and death in our chosen profession, so class would be held as scheduled. Mike Silbert and I walked out.

I drove an old Buick. I’ve lost track of the model, but I remember switching the radio from station to station. Each carried the same message; the President had died. I remember crossing the bridge over the White River. We went to a bar, but I don’t really remember it. From there I drove to my mother’s house, 70 miles away. I told her of my plan to drive to Washington for the funeral. She looked at me blankly and asked, “Why?” Unable to offer a reason, I spent the weekend at Mom’s place. I think I watched Jack Ruby shoot Lee Harvey Oswald in her living room, on Sunday morning, but it might have been a rerun.

That’s the thing about November, 1963. Images have become blurred, indistinct. We lived and relived the experience for years. In those days, every aspect was crystal clear. I no longer have any recollection of the feel of my feet on the auditorium floor, the smell of David’s breath as he announced the shooting. I don’t remember the reaction of my classmates, but I’m sure, like mine, it was shock. I don’t recall hugs or wailing, but we must have comforted one another. There was a time when I still felt the professor’s piercing eyes on my back as I fled the room, but no more.

That November day is more like a movie I saw years ago, one in which I remember the highlights, but have lost the nuances. I treasured the memory, and mourn its loss. It was once real and poignant, a horrible, but precious souvenir of my youth. The clarity of that day will never return.

Some might celebrate the healing of old wounds. I regret its gradual fading. This year I forgot the date. Unlike years past, newscasters did not remind me of the significance of November 22. I will always remember where I was and what I was doing the day President Kennedy was killed, but I no longer feel the sting.
Back Days in Highlands - Part 8

By Herm Wilson

(8/23/1905-1/6/1993)

The dog that went to church

“The history of the true mountaineer will soon be lost forever. We don’t know why our ancestors settled in the rugged mountains of Western North Carolina, but I am sure they had a reason. The young people of today who grew up in the mountains don’t have the slightest idea as to what the true life of a mountaineer was because they were born into the jet age and our nation has changed so much in the last 50 years. I write the following parts of “Back Days in Highlands” so a record of that time can be kept.”

– Herm Wilson

(Published with permission from his son Neville Wilson)

Ole Boss was half bulldog and half English sheepdog. He was jet black with a white breast. No animal ever grew that Ole Boss wouldn’t tackle. He would freely give his life for any member of my family. He would have followed us to the ends of the earth.

We did not want Ole Boss to go with us to church, but go to church he did. We would put a strong leather collar around his neck and fasten a small log chain to his collar and drive a heavy staple into a log. We were sure that Ole Boss was secure but no, some way, some how, he would break loose and come to church and lie down at our feet.

My grandfather despised a dog in the church house and he would try to put Ole Boss out, but Ole Boss would show his long white teeth with a vicious growl that was a warning to leave him alone.

One day we boys decided to stop Ole Boss from going to church some way, somehow.

We were going to church one night so we put the small log chain to his collar and drove a staple into a locust log. We were sure that we had him that time but we were mistaken. He pulled the staple out of the log and dragged the chain about a mile and a half, got a hook on the chain hung over a tree root and broke loose again. He was at our feet when services were over.

On our way back from church, someone found the chain and we brought it back home. But Ole Boss went to church.

Back in those days, people carried a kerosene lantern to light their way back home. One day my mother and sister were going up to Highlands and that’s when Ole Boss made his final trip.

He had run into some truck drivers and they shot him dead. Us boys didn’t find out who killed him for more than a year. I am sure that if we had been on the scene there would have been at least one less truck driver but after thinking it over, maybe that was the best way for Ole Boss to go.

He was the nearest all around dog that I have ever known. He would catch and hold wild hogs; he would tree opossums and squirrels. But he would never hurt little pigs or little lambs; he would never hurt little farm animals. He would run a bear and big game of any kind.

And that’s not all … Ole Boss would go to church!

Herman “Herm” Wilson was one of the six men whose contributions to the Town of Highlands were featured in the Highlands Historical Society’s production of “Highlands Live!” in June 2011. Interest in him led his son Neville and daughter-in-law Kathleen to share some of Herm’s writings that reflect the man’s homespun humor, philosophy and patriotism.
Extra Points

It was a great week in sports, but not a great week to be writing a column (two games, Thanksgiving, Jury Duty) so this week we are just going to go with some quick thoughts from the weekend that was.

UNC went down to UNLV this weekend in what was a virtual road game for the Heels. I did stay up late to watch the entire game, and it looks as though UNC has some of the same issues as last year. They still struggle to defend the three point shot and they had trouble with the pick and roll of UNLV. UNC is still one of the top three teams in the nation (Ohio St. and Kentucky) but they are going to have to fix some things on the defensive end if they want to win a National Championship.

Urban Meyer has agreed to coach the Ohio State Buckeyes-good move on their part because he is the guy who can bring their program back quickly from the Jim Tressel mess. As a Florida fan, I hate to see Meyer go to Ohio State because of all he did at UF and because of the state of the Florida program right now, but OSU was Meyer’s dream job all along and so it is hard to be too upset over that.

There’s a guy in Denver right now who has led the Broncos to a 5-1 record since he took over as the starting quarterback. I’m trying to get through this column without writing his name, but you know who he is… and what he is doing right now is pretty amazing for the Broncos-who are now all of a sudden in playoff contention after a 1-4 start.

LSU proved that they are by far the best team in the land by shellacking Arkansas on Friday—now all that is left to figure out is if the Tigers will play Alabama or Oklahoma State in the BCS Championship. My vote goes to Oklahoma State right now, provided they beat Oklahoma at Bedlam on Saturday-otherwise I guess we will be seeing a rematch of a 9-6 snoozer game from early November.

And finally, the NBA has reached a deal to end the lockout and begin games on Christmas Day. I’m sure some people will be glad that the NBA has come around, but I am simply looking forward to the playoffs more than anything else. My money is on Chicago this year to win the NBA finals—but as always, it is subject to change without any intelligent reason.

ing my position as the District I representative on the Macon County Board of Commisions. This will give the county time to-complete any immediate business before I vacate the seat,” reads the press release.

“I must refocus my priorities on my family and personal issues. Serving Macon County has been a high honor and I am grateful for the opportunity. At this time, I need to concentrate all of my energies on taking care of those things and people most dear to me.”

Around 9:30 p.m., Friday, Nov. 18, Highway Patrol saw McClellan’s vehicle cross U.S. 23 from the right shoulder to the left shoulder and back onto the median and pulled him over for a traffic stop.

Later at the jail, about an hour after the arrest, he blew a .20 in the breathalyzer.

.08 percent.

McClellan, 55, was arrested for drunk-driving in Highlands in 2009, a little over two years ago.

Chris Murray, chairman of the Macon County Republican Party said the Executive Committee will hold a special meeting Monday, December 5, 6:30 p.m. at the Macon County Court House, court room A on the 4th Floor to select a nominee for the District I county commission seat being vacated by McClellan effective December 1.

The executive committee consists of the officers of the party, precinct chairs and vice-chairs, at large committee members, Macon County Republican elected officials and the party Finance Committee Chairman.
The meeting will be closed to the general membership of the party but a press release will be given immediately following the meeting announcing who the nominee is.

Meanwhile, at Thursday night’special meeting of the Mc Board of Commissio-ers members will consult with the MC Executive Committee of the MC Republican Party and hear recommendations for filling McClellan’s seat.

The person chosen must live in District I, the Highlands District.

LOL...

I admit it - I am texting challenged. (To show how old my computer is, my spell check redlines texting.) I'm so ignorant, I don't know if LOL stands for "laughing out loud" or "lots of luck." So, I'm going to claim it means "lack of leadership" and dare anybody to challenge that.

"Lack of leadership" has become the universal mantra against Obama by everybody from Joe the Plumber to Mack the Knife.

Recent users include the Mayor of New York. From The Telegraph: "Michael Bloomberg has launched an attack on Barack Obama for an absence of leadership as Washington failed to hammer out a deficit deal, renewing suggestions he could mount an independent bid for the White House. In a stinging rebuke of Mr. Obama, who remained on the sidelines as the deal collapsed, and a rare intervention into Washington politics, Mr. Bloomberg said: 'It's the chief executive's job to bring people together and provide leadership. I don't see that happening.'

Mr. Bloomberg's words could fuel speculation about whether he would mount a third-party bid for the White House."

Not to be outdone, the other New Yawker, Donald Trump, says he'll ante up. He has denounced Obama's lack of leadership from the rooftops. From the Washington Wire: "He's done it before and he's doing it again. In his new book, 'Time to Get Tough,' Donald Trump lashes into President Barack Obama and threatens to run against him next year if the Republicans don't nominate a strong candidate.

Beating the drum even louder, Mr. Trump details his net worth - which he puts at $7 billion - and says he's prepared to pour a large chunk of his $270 million in liquid assets into a presidential bid. In the book, due out next month, Mr. Trump holds nothing back in blaming Mr. Obama for all that ails the economy. He claims Mr. Obama has spent much of his time traveling 'around the world apologizing for the country' and 'playing nice with China.'"

Not to be outdone, Fortune magazine ran a cover story entitled, American Idiots - How Washington is Destroying the Economy... Senior editor Allan Sloan writes: "Today's (economic) crisis was completely avoidable. You can blame it directly on the fools who brought our country to the brink of defaulting on its debts in the name of saving us from... I'm not sure what. Yes, the Tea Party types bear primary responsibility (this writer disagrees) - but they couldn't have done it without the cowardice and incompetence of the Obama administration (this writer agrees) which let things get way out of hand. But all that aside, at least the Tea Party people have a story and a message. The Obama people have none - at least none that I've been able to discern."

Bringing the issue down to street level, from the 11Alive.com website: "A west Georgia business owner is stirring up controversy with signs he posted on his company's trucks, for all to see as the trucks roll up and down roads, highways and interstates. 'New Company Policy. We are not hiring until Obama is gone.'"

"Can't afford it," explained the employer. "I've got people I want to hire now, but I just can't afford it. And I don't foresee that.

I'll be able to afford it unless some things change in DC. Business owner, Bill Looman, made it clear that he is not refusing to hire anyone, because of the economy. And he blames the Obama administration."

Enough of that. A matter that seems deservedly lost in the shuffle is the labor dispute between the NBA players union and the team owners.

It is a perfect example of the insanity of greed and avarice (excessive or insatiable desire for wealth or gain). While I fail to understand the popularity that professional basketball enjoys, television contracts are huge and tickets go for hundreds of dollars a seat. There is plenty of revenue to go around, enough for the average salary per player of $5.8 million. These guys hit the lottery jackpot every year.

But evidently this isn't enough. The union is niggling over a percentage point or two of gross revenues, while the players are collectively losing $220 million per month. The season is all but erased and billions of dollars are being lost, but talks continue to go nowhere. Maybe by Christmas, they say. Frankly, I'll do just fine if they never play another game.

I don't have the details available to compute how long it would take to make up for the losses mounting up so far this year. Common sense would lead you to believe that it would be a long, long time, especially if the moratorium causes a future lack of interest in what has been a cash cow. Anyway you look at it, it is stupid. I guess the union heads need to prove every now and then that they can cause a problem so they can fix it. Collective bargaining at its worst.

NOTE:
Since this column was originally submitted, the NBA players union and owners reached a tentative agreement to begin the season on Christmas Day. This in no way changes my disdain for the current state of collective bargaining.
Highlanders drop opener to Towns County

The Highlands Highlanders opened the 2011-12 basketball season by hosting the Towns County Indians last Tuesday evening. The Lady Highlanders opened the game by battling the pressure of the Lady Indians and attempting to control the pace of the game. While the Lady Highlanders did a decent job of handling the pressure early, Towns was still able to extend their lead by hitting five three pointers in the first quarter. The lead was just 6 points for Towns with a few minutes left in the second quarter before the Indians forced some turnovers and extended their lead to double-digits. The second half saw the depth of the Indians wear down the Lady Highlanders for a double-digit victory.

In the boys game, the Highlanders came out strongly, forcing turnovers and building a 12 point halftime lead. The smaller Highlanders were able to use pressure defense to quicken the pace of the game and create havoc. Unfortunately for the Highlanders, foul trouble hampered them considerably in the third quarter, as the Indians were in the bonus with just 4 minutes gone in the third quarter. Foul issues also caused the Highlanders to slow the game down, allowing the larger Towns County team to work the ball in the paint on their 6'6 center. Towns cut the lead to 3 at the end of the third quarter, and were able to edge in front with just a minute remaining in the game. A frantic Highlander comeback attempt ended in a flurry of missed layups, and the Indians held on for a 4 point victory.

Oyster Roast a success

The 2nd annual THANKYOU Oyster roast to benefit the Highlands and Cashiers-Glenville Fire Departments, Rescue Squads and EMS was well-attended and even more successful than the first.

Eight bushels of oysters were eaten by many who claimed they were the best they'd ever eaten. We more than doubled the previous monetary goal and much is due to the many generous and delectable gifts from local merchants.

Special thanks to Highlands' Newspapers, the Rec Park, Highlands Hill Deli, Dusty's, Fressers, Sports Page, Pizza Place, Wild Thyme Gourmet, Highlands Smoke House, Mountain Fresh, Farmer's Market, Kilwins, Ugly Dog Pub, Cyprus, Madison's, Summer House, William Durning, Cat Evans and any other wonderful souls who I may have inadvertently forgotten.

My greatest disappointment is that many of our fire and rescue personnel were not present to be thanked. But it was more than double the previous monetary goal and much is due to the many generous and delectable gifts from local merchants.

Smoky Mountain Brass Quintet to Perform in Christmas Concert

First Presbyterian Church will present the Smoky Mountain Brass Quintet in a free concert on Saturday, December 3 at 5 pm. If you really want to get into the Christmas spirit, and hear all of your holiday favorites, make plans to attend this concert! The group dedicates time to the education of young musicians and serves as Quartet in Residence at Western Carolina University, as well as participating in a number of community service performances each year. The church is located at the corner of Main & 5th Streets. Handicap entrances are located on Church Street and on Fifth Street.

Hudson House site of Annual Christmas Day Dinner Buffet

The 10th Annual Christmas Day Dinner will spend its 2nd year in its new home, The Hudson House at Highlands Country Club. Despite the foot of snow over 175 hearty Highlanders made their way to the sumptuous feast. The warmth and charm of the room partnered with the beautiful snow outside the big windows made for a perfect holiday setting. But most of all, everyone was able to sit in the same room, making Christmas for our “Highlands Family” a more intimate, caring, and fun experience. It was like a family dinner without the work.

This amazing buffet will feature traditional holiday fare including turkey, ham, beef tenderloin, squash casserole, scalloped potatoes, sweet potato soufflé, Donna Wood’s famous dressing, sautéed green beans with red peppers, rolls cranberry sauce, mixed green salad and a plethora of mouthwatering desserts. Highlands finest chefs (Marty Rosenfield, Holly Roberts, and Martha Porter) lovingly prepare this meal for all to enjoy.

The cost is only $35 for adults, $15 for children under 11, and children fewer than 5 eat free. All proceeds go to Big Brothers Big Sisters of Highlands and R.E.A.C.H. of Macon County, two local nonprofits. Christmas is a time of giving and sharing, so call Rick Siegel today for reservations. The dinner is from 11a-5p and by reservation only. 828-526-5102.
God’s love is ‘here & now’ and all around

Lee W. Bowman
Pastor, First Presbyterian Church of Highlands

Seldom are we able—in a single service of worship or any single newspaper column—to express the whole of God’s promises to humankind. As a rule, week in and week out, the lectionary readings center us on a single story or theme. One of the things I love about the Advent season, though, is that in a powerful way it takes the ‘there and then’ story of our faith and reminds us yet again that God’s love is ‘here and now.’

That may be one of the greatest blessings of Christmas—more than the presents given and received, more even than the family time when we see loved ones from whom we’ve been separated. The gift of Christmas is that it focuses us squarely on God’s love—a love that survived the fall in the Garden of Eden; a love that promised to Old Abraham that he would be the father of nations; a love that preserved the nation of Israel through exile and its own apostasy; a love that became incarnate in a helpless baby who would become for us a Savior; and a love that even today follows us, surrounds us, regardless of our response or even our acknowledgement of it.

In theological terms we call this God’s providence. It’s a place of privilege that we haven’t earned but which follows us, surrounds us, regardless of our response or even our acknowledgement of it.

I had occasion a number of years ago to witness God’s providence as it was given expression in the life of George Willmott, a crusty old Kentucky farmer who died just two weeks after this encounter I had with him. I had a very full day of church services, a Presbyterian celebration, the CROP walk to alleviate local hunger and last but not least the church picnic.

About 4:30 I made my way out to the picnic, and I confessed I was a little tired. As I was parking, the rain was coming down at a slant. I walked toward our church members, who were huddled under the awning over the picnic table, trying in vain to stay dry—an impossible task since the rain was every bit as horizontal as it was vertical.

One of the first people I saw, not under the awning but right out in the open, was George Willmott—not least of all because at 6 ft., whatever, George was hard to miss. He was dressed in his signature plaid shirt buttoned all the way up, with a cap on his head. I immediately went over to him, not only because I was glad to see him but also because standing next to George was a pretty good thing to do in a hard rain. "Preacher," he beamed, "this is just great. You need to keep having these picnics. They're good for the church."
I looked up at George as my skirt was becoming now thoroughly soaked thinking that maybe his apple cider has hardened and then murmured something less than enthusiastic about the weather. At which point, George said, "Aw, that's not a problem. It's going to clear up here in just a minute." Now I want to tell you that the sky was dark and the rain was pounding down. But George looked at that same sky and saw the promise of sunshine. And in 15 minutes—this is the truth—the sky was blue and the sun shining.
George was a man who trusted in God's gracious provisions—not always easy for someone who farmed for a living and certainly not easy for a man who just a few months before had been gored by a bull. But his surety and trust in God's abiding care was as real as the air he breathed up until the day he drew his last breath.
There's a beautiful metrical version of the Servant Song in Isaiah 12 that goes something like this:
Surely it is God who saves me; I will trust in Him and not be afraid; For the Lord is my stronghold and my sure defense, And He will be my Savior. So may it be for each one of us. A blessed Advent to you all!

our Dubai son and his wife were in town for Thanksgiving. They don't have children but they do have Bear, a giant Rottweiler/Chow mix who is a lovable pussycat.... sometimes. In fact, Bear's favorite toys are kittens my daughter-in-law, Lisa, rescues from the streets of Dubai. We have a picture of Bear standing and staring at the camera with a small kitten swinging from his wagging tail. Amazingly, Lisa always finds a home for them and Bear is alwaysdisappointed to see them go. PS— Bear stayed in Dubai.
The lil missus and I are missing our friends in Highlands. Moving is always a tradeoff: giving up cold weather, good friends, friendly bridge players in return for close-by family, warm weather and large doses.
Finally, here's my last piece of unimportant news. My hazmat paramedic firefighter captain son and his wife loaded their five children in the family car and headed to Auburn, AL for Thanksgiving to visit in-laws. Anytime this family is on the move it's a circus. Their car is properly named "Odyssey." (Thanks for staying awake)
Fred's column can be read on-line all winter and his new mystery/thriller is available on Kindle and the Nook.

Frown lines mean different things to different people, but generally refer to the lines that appear on the face to make us look tired, angry or mad. They are caused by three different factors.

The first is skin aging. This is mostly due to sun damage, acquired, not just when we were young as previously thought, but every day, year around throughout life. The more sun or tanning bed exposure, the more damage created. If we smoke or have smoked the damage has been multiplied many times. The main damage is thinning of the dermis, the support layer of the skin, which can cause wrinkles itself and allows the other two factors, gravity and muscle action, to more easily cause lines in the skin.

Gravity stretches the sun damaged skin and it descends except where ligaments attach the skin to the deeper tissues or bone. At these places, such as under the eyes, at the cheek-lip junction and at the jowl, gravity plays a role too, as many of the wrinkles are due to muscle function trying to elevate the tissues back to their proper position. The latter is especially true in the forehead and lateral to the eyes.

There are multiple ways to correct these problems, depending on their severity and cause. The best all-around treatment is good skin care. For those with no wrinkles now, this may simply be basic skin care avoiding moisturizers that weight the skin down and protection from sun damage using daily zinc oxide sun block (providing UVA protection). Once sun damage has occurred, this also involves use of tretinoin (Retin-A) to restore thickness to the supporting dermis.

Lines or folds from gravity can be similarly treated with fillers. Here, though, the choice of filler is broader and the longevity of effect is greater. The most common areas treated are the lines or hollows that form under the eyes, the “parentheses” between the lips and cheeks, some of the lines of the upper lip from loss of fat, and the depression and lines below the corners of the mouth. Although collagen and hyaluronic acid can be used here, I generally prefer something that can last much longer such as Radiesse® (calcium hydroxypatite, a normal component of the body’s support structure) or your own fat. Radiesse® and fat can also be used to fill depressions caused by gravity and loss of fat, another result of aging. This can raise the tissues in general and, thus, also reduce some of the gravitational folds and wrinkles.

Of course, one of the best and most long lasting ways to eliminate the hollows, folds and wrinkles caused by gravity is surgery such as a brow lift for the forehead lines, a facelift for the lower facial lines or a lower blepharoplasty/midface lift for the lines in the medial cheek around the mouth. Since none of the other methods, except, perhaps, fat injection, is permanent, surgery may also be the least expensive approach.

Since everyone is different and we now have so many different methods to correct these problems, the only way to determine what your individual options are is with a consultation to discuss which line, wrinkle or fold bothers you and the specific methods that would work for you.

Ask Dr. Blue
“How can I prevent Diabetic Retinopathy?”
- Charles from Highlands, NC

Charles, the key with treating Diabetic Retinopathy is early identification and early treatment. If we catch it early enough, we can arrest it before you even know you have a problem and far before any loss of vision. But again, the key is to catch it early. I encourage you to schedule regular vision checkups with your Ophthalmologist so that you may catch such problems early, arrest the progression of the condition and prevent permanent vision loss.

Bryan & Tricia Cox, vacation specialists in Highlands, attended CruiseOne’s 2011 National Conference – one of the industry’s top annual educational forums – aboard Royal Caribbean International’s Allure of the Seas October 9 – 16. CruiseOne – the nation’s leading retail cruise travel franchise as part of World Travel Holdings – provided the 800+ attendees with a variety of general sessions, keynotes, workshops and power networking opportunities centered around the “Expand Your Horizons” theme.

Workshops that Bryan & Tricia attended included “How to Be Successful with e-Commerce,” “The Benefit of Land Tours,” “Million Dollar Ideas,” “Selling European River Cruises,” “One Page Marketing Plans That Work,” “Stuart Cohen’s Five Key Habits of Super-Successful Vacation Salespeople” and “Building Investment Value in Your Franchise.”

Top cruise line executives were also on hand to speak with the vacation professionals, provide updates, give advice and answer questions. Bryan & Tricia networked with senior executives from the top cruise lines such as Vicki Freed, Senior Vice President of Sales with Royal Caribbean International, and also enjoyed a keynote address by Gregg Lederman, “The Brand Integrity Guy.”

“This year’s conference was both inspirational and educational,” said Bryan & Tricia. “We learned a variety of helpful tips and with the land and sea offerings now both available, there are even more options for consumers planning their 2012 vacations.”
