Highlands F&R rescues ‘pinned’ man

If not for a series of fortunate circumstances, Paul Dalton, head mechanic at Highlands Country Club, would likely be paralyzed, if not dead.

At 11:55 a.m., Monday, Nov. 7, Highlands Fire & Rescue responded to a 9-1-1 call about a man pinned between the hydraulic lift and cab of a front-end loader at Highlands Country Club.

Dalton was in the midst of repairing the club’s loader when he mistakenly released the pressure boom which, unbeknownst to him, was slowly easing downward toward him while he worked, until it landed on him, pinning him on his knees to the spot.

Two new faces join the Town Board

Of the 861 registered voters in the corporate limits of Highlands, 258 cast ballots Tuesday – a normal turnout for an off-year municipal election – 31.36%.

Highlands now has two new commissioners. Brian Stiehler and Eric Pierson will join John Dotson, who was re-elected, Amy Patterson and Gary Drake at the table.

The commissioners will be sworn in at the first Town Board meeting in December.

Stiehler gleaned the most votes with 211, followed by Pierson with 187, Dotson with 169, Michael Rogers with 79, Larry Rogers with 34, and there were 6 write-ins.

After Extra Territorial Jurisdiction was abolished, Commissioner Larry Rogers pulled out of the race but it was after the ballots were printed, so he was still listed as a candidate on the ballot.

“I’m excited about the next four years and excited to work with the Town Board and hope to make some positive decisions for the town,” said Stiehler. “I am very thankful for those who supported me.”

“The third time’s the charm,” said Pierson. “Now we will see if we can do good for the town. Thanks to all who supported me.”

“It’s been an honor and a privilege to serve the last four years and I look forward to working with the new Town Board members to continued doing good works for the town,” said Dotson. “I appreciate all who voted for me.”

Zoning Board hears 3 ‘sign’ cases

This week the proprietors of the Silver Eagle on Main Street cut off the part of their sign that put it out of compliance – two days before the same issue is to be heard again by the Zoning Board of Adjustment but this time for the Stone Lantern.

At the Wednesday, Oct. 26, Zoning Board meeting Deborah Nelson appeared before the board for the second time – this time to request a variance.

At the September Zoning Board meeting, her appeal was denied because the sign is too big for the Silver Eagle 19 ft. store frontage – only a 9.5 sq. ft. sign is allowed.

If the eagle and mountain were cut off, the sign would be in compliance but Nelson returned to the October meeting to request a variance on the grounds that compliance would mean mutilating the sign which would then lose its distinctive character. “If the American Eagle...”

What’s best for our citizens?

In this little town full of churches and even two Rotary Clubs, it’s surprising how quickly people forget the creeds and mottos echoed within those chambers—especially if an agenda is at risk.

Case in point.

Much-needed renovations at the Highlands Playhouse have been in the news lately, and at a recent Town Board meeting commissioners agreed to spend $60,000 to make the building owned by the town a safe place to entertain its guests.

A new roof will be installed, including new shingles, ice and water shield membranes and flashing for $31,250; electrical repairs, upgrades and a general overhaul for $18,500; and exterior repairs and replacement of parts as needed for $5,000. Including contingency, the price tag is $60,000.

These repairs will make the building safe, sound and habitable but only during late spring, summer and fall. It would cost another $90,000 to make the building habitable year-round per North Carolina building codes.

There are numerous citizens who believe winterizing the Playhouse would be a good thing for Highlands—good for its citizens and a good draw for tourists year-round. But, there are others who do not want to see the Playhouse winterized at any cost.

Sources say members of the Performing Arts Center board lobbied the upper echelon of Highlands’ Town government to NOT winterize the Playhouse. They were told to voice their concerns during the public comment portion of the Nov. 2 Town Board meeting, but they were a “no show.”

After all, it’s one thing to speak such sentiment behind closed doors into the ear of a presumed ally; it’s quite another to say it during a Town Board meeting where it becomes part of the public record.

Now, why would some members of the PAC board be against the town winterizing the Playhouse? Especially since the current Playhouse board would like to have the building winterized.

Could it be a winterized Playhouse would mean two venues during the off season instead of one? And why is that a bad thing? Hmmmm… could it be competition?

In the end, the Town Board agreed to foot the bill to bring the Playhouse up to par but not to winterize it—at least not now.

The amount of money is hefty—$90,000—and commissioners say that is the only reason winterization was tabled—but hopefully not forever.

But the question remains. How is it that representatives of a nonprofit feel so emboldened that they can make such a request of Highlands and at its highest level?

The Playhouse is an historical Highlands-owned building that should be preserved and fully used. The town should consider taking back what is theirs by renovating, insuring and maintaining its buildings. They should also renegotiate leases with nonprofits that occupy town property so each entity is treated the same way.

As soon as money is available, it would be wise for the town to winterize the Playhouse because it truly is “best for all concerned.”

Furthermore, heeding the call of special interest groups is not “something Jesus would do” if it’s not for the greater good and neither should town officials.

Post Office Update

Dear Editor,

I had hoped our new Post Office could be further along by now, but due to several unfortunate setbacks, the progress has been delayed. My intent was to complete the construction before winter temperatures came to Highlands, to prevent the hazards and inconveniences which it causes. My intention had been to complete construction in a timely manner.

We were unable to begin last spring as planned, and delays have continued. I am sorry and appreciate your patience throughout the months. Winter weather is upon us. Without knowing of unexpected delays, I hope we will enjoy progress with no additional loss of time.

Oliver ‘Earl’ Young, Jr.

Oliver Earle Young Jr. died in peace on October 25, 2011 in Highlands, NC, in the company of family members. The son of Oliver Earle Young of Cuba, Alabama, and Margaret Southard Young of Erie, Pennsylvania, he was born in Asheville, NC on September 2, 1927. He grew up in West Palm Beach, FL and Highlands, NC, graduated from Riverside Military Academy, served in the Army of Occupation in Italy following World War II, and attended the University of Florida and Emory University.

In 1951, he met Mary Luther Lissenden in West Palm Beach when she returned home for spring break during her senior year at Smith College. They married in 1952 and settled in Highlands, where he took over the ownership of Wits End Shop, established by his mother in 1940, and began developing Whiteside Estates subdivision between Highlands and Cashiers. In 1960, he opened Wits End on Worth Avenue in Palm Beach, which was a vibrant presence on the Avenue for more than 20 years. Wits End of Highlands continues to be owned and operated by his family today.

Earle was active as an usher at Bethesda-by-the-Sea Episcopal Church in Palm Beach, and served as President of the Worth Avenue Merchants Association. An avid reader, he had broad interests ranging from the history of Western North Carolina and American history to building, architecture and horticulture. One of his proudest accomplishments was constructing with his four sons an authentic log house, reassembled from two historic cabins, which is situated on the lake that he also built. Full of vitality, he was a vigorous presence, an enterprising and engaging man who was devoted to his family, lived...
OK, it should be no surprise to you we're back in Florida and you probably don't care anyway. Actually some do and are elated we're gone. You know I'm a winter weenie and you probably don't care about that either. But just so you'll know, life is not that great here in the flat lands so stay where you are. Here's a few ways I can tell I've returned to South Florida.

1. The humidity is so high that when you hang out your clothes to dry, they get wetter.
2. The pool guy informs me he removed more than 50 dead crabs and a few snakes from the pool. He also informed me he found an alligator in another pool. (He has pictures.) He also runs very fast.
3. And speaking of scary critters and Python reproduction is out of control in the Everglades and reproducing faster than Muslims.

4. Our famous Florida wave is a variation of the Highlands' wave except we use a different finger.
5. Our air conditioning bill is higher than our heating bill in Highlands.
6. And finally, when you tell a Floridian to have a nice day, they respond, “Don't tell me what to do!”

Burmese python reproduction is out of hand and no one seems to know what to do about it. Each pregnant python lays a skillion eggs. Our 15-foot-long alligators that have always been around have chomped down a few pythons but not

I embraced the journey. I’ve always found it curious how parents describe their child’s age. It begins with days, such as, “Tommy is three days old.” As Tommy ages, his journey is noted in weeks, months, and finally years. Somewhere around 26 weeks, Tommy’s age was measured in months. Somewhere around 24 months, parents report progress in years. The kid starts reporting his own age when he can barely speak and lacks the digital dexterity to hold up three fingers without assistance from his other hand. As he ages, he becomes enamored with age. Shortly after his sixth birthday, he says he is six and a half. Before he reaches six and a half, he aims to be almost seven. Through adolescence and adulthood, we stop dealing in fractions. We minimize, rather than exaggerate our age. We may even lie, claiming ourselves to be a few years younger than our actual age. Some people refuse to answer the question, and most of us eventually learn that it is impolite to ask.

I thought that was the end of it. Sure, when a person reaches 100, the Channel 13 News crew shows up at the nursing home. Lilly is usually dressed in white and is wearing a broad, but wrinkled smile, and a large, but wilted, corsage. Mort, the male centurion, prefers a stained grey cardigan, even in August, and is no less eager than Lilly to share the secrets of longevity.

We all reach an age of smug satisfaction when we finally qualify for Social Security payments, especially in light of dire predictions that younger workers will find an empty vault when they reach retirement age. I make it a practice to frequently thank my younger coworkers for their generosity, and ask them to keep the contributions coming in, a gesture which makes them wish I’d buy a grey cardigan and ride off into the sunset. They’re confident I could add the stains later.

I find myself tracking down deceased relatives. Dad and my maternal grandfather both died in their early 50s. I passed them years ago. I’m picking off Dad’s brothers and sisters, one by one. I’ve got sites on Mom, Uncle Mark, and Aunt Anne, distant, but inviting targets. Getting old is a blast.

Not long ago, while working out at the gym, I commented to myself, “not bad for a 71-year-old.” When I realized I’m months from my 75th birthday, I thought of myself as “almost 71,” and then amended that to “seventy-and-a-half!”

Nature takes care of us, provides for us in the present and prepares us for an unknown future. I would never have guessed that the same guy who once fretted over a receding hairline would shave his few remaining hairs and approach the future with confidence and a sense of adventure.

I don’t think I’ll reach the point of reporting my age in weeks or days, but I can’t promise, that if asked, I won’t proudly respond that I’m seventy-and-five months. Maybe aging is all I have to look forward to. On the other hand, just maybe, one end of life is as exciting and full of wonder as the other. I’d rather enjoy the journey than worried about the destination.
The last call

“The history of the true mountaineer will soon be lost forever. We don’t know why our ancestors settled in the rugged mountains of Western North Carolina, but I am sure they had a reason.

The young people of today who grew up in the mountains don’t have the slightest ideas as to what the true life of a mountaineer was because they were born into the jet age and our nation has changed so much in the last 50 years. I write the following parts of “Back Days in Highlands” so a record of that time can be kept.”

Horse Cove is about three miles southeast of Highlands. It’s a beautiful valley hemmed in by four large mountains – Fodderstack, Sagee, Rich and Black Rock. The little valley is about a mile wide and 1 ½ miles long.

Horse Cove is where I went to school more than 60 years ago. The Alex Edwards family was a large family who lived in Horse Cove. They had five sons and three daughters. My family and the Edwards family were close friends and neighbors. They had a son by the name of Garcie who owned a beautiful saddle horse, with plenty of spirit. Garcie was about 21 years old; I was about 12 years old.

On Sunday evenings, he would ride over to our place. It was about a three-mile trail. He would let me ride behind him and we would ride up toward Highlands and then back down the road. His horse’s name was Dandy. Sometimes he would ask me if I would like to see how fast ol’ Dandy could run. I was always ready to try new experiences.

Garcie would tighten the reins and say, “Hoot’ em Dandy!” We would take off like the Pony Express for a mile-fast ride.

At the time, we were fighting World War 1 with Germany. We had a German shell. Several years later they shipped his remains back to Horse Cove. I learned when his funeral would be. I walked over the trail to a little community cemetery. Several of his friends attended his funeral. The first thing that I noticed was a steel coffin, draped with the Stars and Stripes.

The first thing that I noticed was a steel coffin, draped with the Stars and Stripes. Someone read a few verses from the Bible, then he was laid to rest in a German shell. Weeks later they shipped his remains back to Horse Cove.

I missed Garcie, Ol’ Dandy and the Sunday evening ride. Then the bad news reached us that Garcie had been killed by a German shell. Weeks later they shipped his remains back to Horse Cove. The first thing that I noticed was a steel coffin, draped with the Stars and Stripes. Someone read a few verses from the Bible, then he was laid to rest in the community cemetery.

Several Sundays passed and Garcie hadn’t come to go for a ride. Then someone told me he had been called into the US Army. He was given a brief training at Camp Jackson, SC, and then shipped overseas. He was in the Infantry Division as most mountain boys were good riflemen and sharpshooters.

I missed Garcie, Ol’ Dandy and the Sunday evening ride. Then the bad news reached us that Garcie had been killed by a German shell. Weeks later they shipped his remains back to Horse Cove. Now and then I attend a friend’s funeral at the community cemetery in Horse Cove and think back over the years, the things that have happened in my lifetime – dirt roads, log cabin homes, horse and buggies, wild rivers full of trout, wild turkey and grouse, cattle grazing the range, sheep on Satulah Mountain, wool socks that my mother and sisters would knit for me right from our sheep’s backs.

Sometimes I can hear the old spinning wheel on a cold, snowy, winter night. Sometimes the snow would blow through the cracks in our log home. But we all seemed to be happy. It was the only life we knew. We had a big fireplace that would keep us warm at least on one side.

The mountaineer will never go back to those days. We are now living in the Jet Age, the Moon Age, the Crime Age and the Drug Age.

Where from here?
There are things you can’t miss unless you live under a rock. I never watched an episode of Dallas, but even I wondered who shot J.R. Before I read Kathryn Stockett’s The Help, I knew there were people who had very strong feelings about the book, especially those who hadn’t read it, and swore they wouldn’t. When it was made into a movie, the pro and con categories expanded to those who’d seen the movie, and those who swore they wouldn’t go see it under any circumstances. You have to have a certain grudging admiration for people who actually come out and say “I don’t know anything about this, and I refuse to learn anything about it.” That kind of determined narrow-mindedness denotes a certain kind of character. As a Southerner by birth, I grew up surrounded by strong-willed people, and folks who held convictions that sometimes defied reason, scientific proof, or common sense. After all, the parking lot of the local Kroger was full of cars sporting bumper stickers defiantly stating, “Save your Confederate money. The South will rise again!”

We had our share of banned books, too. The city council met to determine which books could and could not adorn the shelves of the local libraries. A neighbor confided, “I’ve never read that book, Catcher in the Rye, but I’ll bet it’s a humdinger!” You almost have to have a certain admiration for stupidity as proud and simple as that. But, back to the Help. I’m not going to say too much about the plot – spoiler alert – but here it is in a nutshell.

The story takes place in Jackson, Mississippi, in the early 1960s. It is told from the standpoint of a young white woman, Skeeter, and several black maids who work for families in the area. As you can imagine, many of the maids have nightmarish stories to tell about their treatment at the hands of their employers, but there are also sensitive, positive stories about the interaction between the maids and the people for whom they work.

While I was born in Florida and raised in Virginia, I have a different take on things, with a Yankee father, and a French mother whose two brothers lived in Africa for a number of years. It amazes me to hear people mutter and shake their heads about the former apartheid regime in South Africa, when I was raised in not-different circumstances in the 1950s and early 1960s. My high school class of 1968 was the first racially integrated class in my school’s history; my brother’s class of 1965 was the last all-white one.

Even those who have not read The Help have been commenting on the role of African American housekeepers, maids, and cleaning ladies in their families. Many of these people were trusted and beloved members of their family’s inner circle, but were they really “family?” Many folks feel they were. It remains to see how the employees felt.

When I was eight, my mother sat us all down, and told us she was going back to work. Maman was bored to death staying home, minding the house, and felt that her children were old enough to manage without her greeting us upon our return from school with milk and a warm cookie. With the increase in family income, we could now afford to have a cleaning lady, and so the search began.

Upon the recommendation of a neighbor, Cora entered our lives. She became a subject of fascination to us. My mother would go to the part of town where the African American community lived, and bring Cora home in Maman’s Renault Dauphine. Cora would squeeze into the front passenger seat (she couldn’t fit in the back), and the right side of the car would immediately sag. My Irish grandmother was a very large lady, but Cora had her beat in the pounds department. Maman did not have that ingrained code of conduct of how to treat “the help,” and I often felt her frustration of not knowing how to deal with certain situations. She treated the cleaning ladies enough to make a difference. It's living in pre-historic times. It's getting scary because all these like to quietly lay and wait for a meal to stroll by, then POW, you're either swallowed whole or chomped into pieces. I hate when that happens. Actually, I think being squeezed to death and swallowed whole is better. Please, write in with your preference.

Did I mention we also have anacondas, the largest snake on the planet? One reason I love to call people living in Florida a bunch of non thinking Floridiot is that these boneheaded bozos turned these dangerous critters lose in the Everglades after they tired of them as pets. While I'm not an expert on the sex life of snakes, I'm told the python is more sexually active than the anaconda. Hummm, surely there's a political joke there somewhere.

Therefore all this is important to me is that our home is right next to a natural saltwater preserve, and would you believe we're right in the heart of the diy? Wouldn't you think a person would be safe from snakes and gators living a few blocks from one of the busiest intersections in North Palm Beach? Wrong, crock-breath. There are some scary sounds coming from that preserve at night. Do raccoons growl?

Ok, let's change subjects.

When I'm living in Highlands I like to send my Floridiot friends the police and news reports from this paper. Just for fun, here are a few headlines from the land of the bigwinds and deadly snakes.

Headline: "Red Cross helping fire victims in Lantana." Wow, I wonder what they did to get fired. More unemployment.

Headline: "Dolphins lose seven in a row. Coach puts home up for sale but claims he's not going anywhere." (Ha, that's what he thinks.) Police decline to act as body guards for the coach, saying he deserves whatever he gets. Highlands' High football team could beat the Dolphins.

Headline: "Police and Fire Rescue rushed to Hobe Sound after tornado strikes trailer park." OK, I give up. Why do tornados form and then head straight toward trailer parks?

Headline: "Nine year old girl wigs out, goes into a rage, and terrorizes her school bus, emptying it...throws chair at cops."

And finally, "Firefighter Lieutenant resigns after exposing himself to a minor at a Christian Day Camp." (Try to top that one)

The last time we heard from our hopeless honey, L. Lohan was sentenced to scrubbing toilets in the LA County Morgue. Seems that the poor thing just couldn't manage to make her court-ordered psycho-therapy sessions and the judge says enough is enough. Talking tough, her Honor sentenced LL to 300 days in the hoosegow (yikes) and that's that. Well, almost. She stayed 270 days leaving 30 to serve, except the jails are so crowded with miscreants, she only has to serve 20% of her time; we're down to six days. The over-under is 24 hours when all is said and done.

Judge Stephanie laid out a rigorous probation schedule including an eternity of service in the morgue, and an endless series of trips to the shrink. In a show of charity, the judge gave her a week to show up for her overnight in the clink so she can finish a photo shoot for Playboy, in which she will apparently appear in the full monty. It's a reshoot – when they did the original last week, evidently her teeth didn't show up white enough, so she got a zoom job (teeth whitening, I guess) and now she is sparkling.

On the subject of weirdness, a fellow Minnesotan, a former Navy Seal and a one-term governor of MN, Jesse Ventura is so upset by the dismissal of this airport security lawsuit that he threatened to apply for dual citizenship so he can spend more time in his beloved Mexico – or run for president of what he labeled “the Fascist States of America,” so says Yahoo! News.

Ventura, also a former wrestling star, sued the U.S. government in January, alleging that airport scans and pat-downs amounted to unreasonable search and seizure. Ventura has said his titanium hip, implanted in 2008, sets off metal detectors and that agents previously used hand-held wands to scan his body. He said he was subjected to a body pat-down after an airport metal detector went off last November. Butch up you wuss - I've had a fake hip for years and have been all but strip-searched in the middle of the Atlanta airport more than once. Get over it.

Now that we have done our gender equal waste of newsprint on the irrelevancies of the world, let's get serious. Slick Willie, the man who would be King (of the World) has come out with a book at a most interesting time. With the election a year away, and with the Obama presidency in dire straits, Bill has provided "Back to Work: Why We Need Smart Government for a Strong Economy."

Without even getting to the content of the book, the title cleverly tells volumes.

"Back to Work" reminds the reader that the unemployment rate is atrocious, and that Obama has done nothing whatsoever about it; at least nothing that has been effective. "Why We Need a Smart Government..." implying that we don't have a smart government. If we had one, we wouldn't need one. "...For a Strong Economy." Reminding us, once again, that the economy is in the crapper. Very clever.

Getting into the meat of the matter, Clinton wasted no time in pointing out political missteps in recent years. According to The Washington Post: “First was not raising the federal debt ceiling in the first two years of the president’s term, when Democrats still had a majority in Congress, and the failure to devise an effective national campaign message during the midterm elections of 2010. Clinton also suggests, obliquely, that Obama’s criticism of Wall Street has been too harsh and counterproductive.”

“Clinton, at times, paints a gloomy portrait of the U.S. economy. It is heartening that people all over the world want to pursue their version of the American Dream but troubling that others are doing a better job than we are of providing it to their people” he writes in a passage about America’s standing in the world. “I can understand the pessimism of the young; we’re in a mess now.”

On the Market, Off-Season
What to know when the sales season slows

A n estate set amid a fresh snowfall may conjure up images of Currier & Ives, but a “For Sale” sign on the property paints a different scene.

Selling a home in the off-season is a challenge.

In the U.S., sales typically ramp up in early spring and peak in June and July, according to data from the National Association of Realtors. Of the 4,907,000 homes sold last year, June saw the most closings at 555,000. As a rule, families prefer to be settled in a new home for the start of the fall school term. Here on the Highlands’ Plateau, most serious buyers may look all season but tend to make offers and close toward the end of the season so that they can prepare a home for their personal enjoyment next spring.

In the winter, when buyers start to thin, sellers need to tweak their game plans.

The definition of off-season, however, is a fluid one based on location and whether the residence is in a primary or second-home market. Pick a spot on the globe and off-season can mean rainy, hurricane or triple-digit-degree season. Winter is the obvious off-season here in Highlands.

Property marketed and priced appropriately to the correct audience could easily sell at any time of the year. However, a seller must get even more competitive and be committed to selling to draw buyers out in the winter.

There are some advantages to listing a home in the off-season. Window shoppers largely disappear, for one thing. Buyers who are willing to trudge through rain, sleet and snow tend to be more serious. What’s more, there are fewer homes for them to look at since inventory goes down.

If you’re selling off-season, consider these seven strategies:

• Spark Their Imagination: Have photographs on hand of your home in its best light and in its best season — the landscaping in full bloom, the pool on a sunny day. At the same time, don’t hesitate to highlight your home’s here-and-now splendors. Every season has its beauty. Get buyers to picture themselves enjoying your home any time of the year.

• Double Your Efforts: Buyers will come off the fence for a property that catches their eye no matter the season, but you have to make sure to grab their attention. Develop a marketing plan that includes incentive tactics — and then

Look Sharp:
Even the toniest estates can look a bit forlorn under rainy or wintry skies. Make sure driveways and walkways are cleared of leaves or snow. Consider bringing in a lighting designer to brighten up exteriors and enhance curb appeal during shorter days of the year. Add a punch of seasonal color and administer to landscaping issues quickly.

Create Buzz: Grab buyers’ attention in inventive ways. You may draw off-season foot traffic by opening up your residence to the public as part of a historic home or Spring garden tour.

Up the Ante: Sweeten the deal by offering buyers incentives for a quick sale. Sellers might throw in furniture, art, golf carts, or factor in a club membership for a swift closure.

Let Them Linger: Give buyers a reason to stick around. If you are serious about selling your home in the winter, keep the heat at a comfortable temperature. Most homes are shut down and are sometimes colder inside than the weather outside. If your home is freezing, buyers just want to leave. The longer the interested buyer stays in the home, the better chance you have of creating interest in a sale.

As all five of you who regularly read this column know (thanks Mom), I sometimes embrace my inner dork and write about professional wrestling. Since my childhood, I have enjoyed the fake sport and followed it with varying interest (insert joke about men in tights…or as my wife calls them…man panties). One of the most important parts of being a professional wrestler is the ability to cut a promo that incites the crowd and makes them react, and one of the best ways to do that is to come up with a signature phrase that the crowd can repeat. Here are my top ten catchphrases in professional wrestling history.

(Honorable Mentions)

1. It's true... oh it's true-Kurt Angle
2. You can't see me-John Cena

While it pains me to have this on here—Cena's catchphrase and signature hand motion is probably the most recognizable thing in wrestling today.

10. Woo woo woo... you know it—Zack Ryder.

Most people have never heard of Ryder, but he has made a name for himself by mastering the internet through his hilarious YouTube videos. The guy lives his gimmick and his catchphrase has become a crowd favorite.

This catchphrase is actually more memorable because of the maniacal laugh that DiBiase added after it—but it fit his gimmick of the “Million Dollar Man” perfectly.

8. Everybody's got a price-Ted DiBiase. This catchphrase is actually more memorable because of the maniacal laugh that DiBiase added after it—but it fit his gimmick of the “Million Dollar Man” perfectly.

7. Hey Yo. Scott Hall/Razor Ramon.

The recent special on ESPN about Hall and his battles with alcohol was sad, but back in the day, Hall could get a crowd going with just these two simple words.

6. Ooooh what a rush! - The Legion of Doom. Now we are starting to get into the legendary area... there was nothing quite like the low growl of Road Warrior Hawk when he belied out this phrase. (When my wife reads that sentence she is so going to make fun of me)

5. Rest in Peace-The Undertaker. The greatest gimmick in history—bar none. The funeral music, the grand entrance, the old time western Undertaker outfit—was ten when the Undertaker debuted and he was extremely intimidating in the eyes of a ten year old.

4. If ya smell... what the Rock... is cooking—The Rock.

Arguably the biggest star in wrestling history, the Rock is now a staple in action movies everywhere. However, when the Rock was in the WWE, he cornered the market on catchphrases. “Layin the smackdown,” “It doesn’t matter what you think,” and the rest all still pale in comparison to the original Rocky catchphrase.

3. Whatcha gonna do, when the 24 inch pythons, and Hulkamania run wild over you—Hulk Hogan.

The guy who brought wrestling into Hollywood, for better or for worse—Hogan and Hulkamania ran wild on America during the 1980s.

2. And that’s the bottom line, cuz Stone Cold said so-Stone Cold Austin.

Stone Cold Steve Austin was an amazing phenomenon of the 1990’s. A midcard wrestler stuck in a horrible “Ringmaster” gimmick—Austin reverted to his natural personality and exploded in popularity with his foul mouth and anti-establishment persona.

1. To be the man... you have to beat the man—Ric Flair.

Simply the best catchphrase of all time—Flair was the epitome of the great interview. He could make the crowd love him or hate him regardless of where he was at or what he was doing at the time. Even today, the word Woooo! is synonymous with Flair and his free-wheelin, kiss-stealin image.

no differently from any other human beings.

Cora lasted a while, and was later replaced by Rose, who could have been her twin. Rose had four children by four different fathers, a topic we found more fascinating than shameful. Like Cora, her main duties were to clean the windows, wax the floor, and take care of the laundry. Since our only television was in my parents' room (along with the only air conditioner), cleaning ladies would set up their ironing boards in the master bedroom, turn on the air conditioning, and iron for hours while watching soap operas, and drinking massive amounts of soda, which we were forbidden to touch.

Were these women fond of us? I hope so. A chatty child, I often tried to make conversation with Cora and Rose, and didn't have much success. The only memorable event occurred when I returned from school one day, battered and bruised from having been set upon by local rednecks who were slightly older than I was. “Now, don't you fret none, Miss Michie. Them's poor white trash. They's hardly folks,” was the consolation I got.

But Cora and Rose disappeared from our lives in a cloud of mystery. The spare electric razor Daddy kept for business trips went missing. My French great-grandmother's sewing shears also vanished. Little things disappeared. At first, we just thought they'd been misplaced. When they never turned up, we became sad, then suspicious, then angry. My mother wanted to bring the police in. The neighborhood women chided her, and told her to keep her mouth shut. “They're just like magpies,” one woman drawled. “If something is bright and shiny, they just have to take it. They can't help themselves.” We were outraged, furious that any group of people should be seen as less human, less moral, less honest, just because of their skin color.

Thus, we remained without a cleaning lady, or rather, I got drafted into the role. No little princess, me! No, I got an allowance, but it wasn't for being cute, it was for dusting, vacuuming, doing the laundry and ironing, washing my parents' cars, shoveling snow, mowing the lawn, cleaning windows, washing and drying dishes. I envied my school friends who came home to beds they didn't make, and meals they didn't help cook.

Then came Mattie Troyer. She was Amish, complete with plain-colored dresses, bonnets, and thick black stockings. I'll never forget the first day on the job, when she got down on her hands and knees, scraping years of old floor wax off the floor like making butter curls. When all the chores were done, Mattie often baked shoofly pies and other Amish delicacies for us. My brother went off to college, and my cat Tiger died the same day; it was Mattie, not Maman, who held me in her arms, and comforted me. All of this was long ago. Mattie Troyer, in her 40s, married a widower. I hope he treated her with kindness and love. She outlived him, and entered a nursing home, dying there before I was able to track her down and contact her. I'll always remember the part she played in my childhood, and wish I'd had the chance to tell her how for us, she was more than “the help.” She was family.

Michelle is a writer and translator who moved to Highlands after years of living in Baltimore, Sydney, Paris and New York. She lives in town with her two very spoiled cats, Orion and Weasel. A woman of infinite good sense, Mattie would agree with her that you shouldn't judge a book by its cover. You also shouldn't judge it without reading it.
A mother says to her child: “Don’t touch the stove. It’s hot.” A coach says to his players: “Do this or that. It will protect you in the game.” An officer says to his troops: “The enemy is coming. Stay ready.”

Warnings. All commendable and expected. It is axiomatic: You warn those you care about. You warn those for whom you’re responsible. Interesting though isn’t it what we do with warnings. We can simply write them off by saying “that doesn’t apply to me” which is like ignoring the sign on the frozen pond which says “thin ice” or we can gamble with the warnings. When we gamble we say: “I see the sign warning of thin ice but I’m different. “I’m skilled. I’m hearty. I’ll take my chances” or “I can simply read the sign and say “OK I get it and I will obey.” Which one (by the way) would describe you?

In Ezekiel 33 God warns some seven times in nine verses. The format is simple. There is one who warns. In this case it is God through Ezekiel. And there is the other who is responsible to do something with the warning. Ezekiel must warn. He must blow the trumpet. If he doesn’t then he is held accountable by God. The application is for every Christian. The message of God’s love is incomplete without the warning to those who reject it.

Then there is the one who hears the warning. God says that if the hearer ignores the warning then he is responsible for the consequence. But if he heeds the warning he will save himself. So let’s fast forward to November 2011.

God loves you and me more than we can possibly imagine. He demonstrated this through the death, burial and resurrection of His Son Jesus Christ. The purpose of which was to pay the price for all the sins of all the people for all of history. Incredible but true. He then invited us to a personal relationship with Him. This is a volitional decision of repentance, faith, confession and submission to His Lordship.

He welcomes those who will come and warn those who won’t. Somewill ignore it. (But they can’t, ultimately.) Some will gamble with it. (But will lose ultimately.) Some will say “OK I get it and I will obey.”

Every child, athlete, and soldier will say a thousand times over “thank you for warning and protecting me.” And that is also what everyone will say in heaven for thousands and thousands of eternities.

Single is removed, the sign will no longer represent the American-made products we sell,” read Nelson from a prepared statement. “Granting a variance for this sign is the minimum possible deviation from the ordinance. We aren’t grossly oversized compared to the visual impact of other signs permitted within sight of our store.”

She presented a petition of 460 signatures of citizens and visitors requesting the town allow the sign to stay intact on the front of the shop. Since only verbal testimony can be entered into the record at a Zoning Board variance hearing, the board wasn’t allowed to accept the petition as evidence.

After much discussion – and despite mixed emotions on the subject — the variance was denied unanimously and so this past Monday night, the eagle and mountains that framed the sign were cut off.

“The board concludes that the applicant hasn’t demonstrated practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships in the way of carrying out the strict letter of the ordinance and that the applicant doesn’t meet the hardship requirement,” determined the board.

Basically, by complying with the ordinance, the Nelsons can still secure reasonable return from or make reasonable use of their property.

They swear they heard a screech when they cut off the eagle’s legs, but said, “We still love Highlands and we love having a business here.”

Though a rare thing, that same night, the Zoning Board unanimously granted a variance for a shopping center sign at Mountain Brook Center.

Owner Patricia Thornton needs to update the shopping center sign and wants to keep it where it is, but the current sign encroaches into the setback along Carolina Way — standing 11 feet from the street and encroaches four feet into the setback of the right-of-way of N. 4th Street, which is 66 feet.

The current Mountain Brook Center sign has been in place since the early 1980s, likely prior to the adoption of the sign ordinance in 1984, said Ward.

The sign couldn’t be moved backwards, as it would end up in a parking space in a parking lot which is grandfathered and wouldn’t meet today’s standards if it was reconfigured, which would be necessary if the sign was placed in a parking space.

Since altering the parking lot with the sign in a space could jeopardize a reasonable use of the property, hardship was established. “It is the board’s conclusion that there are practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships in the way of carrying out the strict letter of the ordinance,” reads the conclusion.

Wednesday night, Nov. 9, the Zoning Board will hear another variance request this time from Ralph deVille of the Stone Lantern who has been told his sign is out of compliance and must be altered.

The front of his building on Main Street is 25 linear feet which allows for a 12 ½ sq. ft. sign. The current sign, which has been on the building since 1960, exceeds the maximum allowance by 5 ½ sq. ft.

The town adopted its sign ordinance in 1984 and amended it in 1990. Merchants were given seven years to come into compliance — which deVille hasn’t done.

deVille argues that his sign is in compliance pursuant to the 1990 amended sign ordinance and continues to be so. Like the Nelsons, he contends that the look of the sign on his store is vitally important to all who have come to Highlands and represents continuity over the years. “I submit it is of vital importance to a majority of those returning year after year,” he said.

He will ask the Zoning Board to grandfather both the look and size of the Stone Lantern sign “so that the Stone Lantern sign can continue to remain the same as it has for the past 50 years and can be a reassuring and important landmark to returning visitors.”

Highlander competes in State Golf Championships

Two years ago, Highlends School embarked on building a women’s golf program, and after two short years the Lady Highlanders are already experiencing great success under coach Barbara Reese. The Lady Highlander golf team placed two players in regionals, Sophomore Emily Gabbard and Senior Stephanie Smart and Smart advanced all the way to the state finals.

The NCHSAA 1A/2A West regionals were held in Shelby, NC. At regionals, the participants walk 18 holes and qualifying is based on the top 20 scores. This was somewhat of a challenge for the Lady Highlanders because at their meets they only walk nine holes. “We don’t usually walk 18,” said Stephanie Smart, “we are used to walking nine and so you have to really concentrate as you get more tired on the back nine.”

Emily Gabbard shot a 117 over 18 holes, and Smart was able to qualify for the NCHSAA state finals by shooting a 104. This marked the second year in a row that Highlends has been represented at the state finals in an individual sport, as Hayden Bates was able to run in the NCHSAA finals last year for cross country.

The NCHSAA state golf championship is held in the Pinehurst area, and the 1A/2A finals were held at Longleaf Golf Course in Southern Pines. In the NCHSAA finals, participants played a total of 36 holes over two days for a combined score. Smart teed off at 11AM on Monday October 31st and shot a 111 for the day. On Tuesday, she teed off at 9:20 AM and shot a 116. While Smart did not win, she said that playing at state was “a great experience” and that she wished that Highlends had started a golf program sooner so that she could have played as a freshman. Smart is the lone senior on the Lady Highlander golf team, as all of the remaining players are sophomores.

Highlanders march on to third round

The Highlands Highlander soccer team advanced to the third round of the NCHSAA playoffs on Saturday with a win over Smoky Mountain Conference rival Murphy.

Highlends earned a first round bye courtesy of their 11th straight SMC championship and hosted the Bulldogs, who defeated the Andrews Wildcats in their first round matchup.

The first half against Murphy saw the Highlanders dominate possession but have nothing to show for it. Finally, with about ten minutes to go in the first half, Isaac Beavers was able to head home a long throw from Andrew Renfro to put the Highlanders on top 1-0. Despite controlling possession, the Highlanders maintained the slim 1-0 margin until a rare defensive mistake from Highlands allowed a poorly struck ball from Murphy to trickle into the left corner and equalize the game for Murphy at 1. The sizable Murphy crowd erupted at this development, and the Bulldogs knocked the Highlanders back on their heels and the momentum had clearly shifted in Murphy’s favor at the half.

The second half started slowly for the Highlanders, as they looked to get themselves and the crowd back into the game. Finally, midway through the second half, Renfro found Bryon Neumann and Neumann was able to put home the go ahead goal for the Highlanders. Neumann’s goal energized the crowd and seemed to deflake the Bulldogs, as just minutes later Renfro was able to score for the Highlanders and make the score 3-1. Murphy then fell apart and the Highlanders continued to push, getting another goal from Renfro and two more goals from Dax Lloyd to complete the final margin of 6-1.

The Highlanders will host Thomas Jefferson today at 6PM. Admission is $5 and passes are not accepted due to it being a state playoff game. With a victory over the Gryphons, the Highlanders would host a playoff game on Saturday with a time to be determined.

“He was basically suffocating,” said Brian Stiehler, golf course superintendent of Highlands Country Club. “Each time he exhaled, the boom eased down further pinching him. He just couldn’t breathe.”

Stiehler said when he arrived on scene, Dalton’s entire head was blue and it was clear no blood or oxygen was getting to his upper body. He said he feared the worst.

Stiehler said he watched in awe and admiration as the Highlands Fire & Rescue crew worked — they saw the problem, took control and without any hesitation fixed it, he said.

Quickly, they used another front-end loader on the property to pull the boom off Dalton. He immediately fell backwards looking basically lifeless, said Stiehler. “That’s when the EMS crew jumped in to revive and stabilize him,” he said.

MAMA was called and once Dalton was breathing on his own he was transported by ambulance to the club’s driving range tee where the MAMA helicopter was waiting.

He was airlifted to Mission Hospital where a full body scan revealed no internal injuries. In fact, he was released from the hospital and sent home Wednesday.

Stiehler visited him in the hospital Monday night and said he was in good spirits and had no memory loss.

“This has impacted us all — all his coworkers,” he said. “Something like this changes the way you look at life. Things can happen so quickly.”

Stiehler said he can’t say enough about Highlands Fire & Rescue and EMS crews. “I have absolute respect for everything they do. There was no hesitation and they were in complete control.”

The reality of diabetic retinopathy

By Dr. Richard Blue
Blue Laser Group

Diabetic retinopathy can develop in anyone who has type 1 diabetes or type 2 diabetes. The longer you have diabetes, and the less controlled your blood sugar is, the more likely you are to develop diabetic retinopathy.

Diabetic retinopathy is a complication of diabetes that results from damage to the blood vessels of the light-sensitive tissue at the back of the eye (retina) resulting in leakage of blood and fluid in the back of the eye.

It’s possible to have diabetic retinopathy and not know it. In fact, it’s uncommon to have symptoms in the early stages of diabetic retinopathy. Eventually, however, diabetic retinopathy can result in blindness. Careful management of your diabetes is the best way to prevent vision loss.

People with type 1 or type 2 diabetes should have a dilated eye exam performed by an eye doctor (ophthalmologist) every year. The American Diabetes Association (ADA) recommends that anyone who’s over 10 years old with type 1 diabetes have his or her first eye exam within five years of being diagnosed with diabetes. For people with type 2 diabetes, the ADA advises getting the initial eye exam soon after you’ve been diagnosed with diabetes because you may have had diabetes for some time without knowing it.

At Blue Laser Group, part of your eye exam may include a retinal photography test called fluorescein angiography. Your eyes are dilated and then pictures taken of the inside of your eyes using special dye which show images that pinpoint blood vessels that are closed, broken down or leaking fluid. Laser treatment may be recommended which can stop or slow the leakage of blood and fluid in the eye. This quick in-office procedure is typically described as virtually painless and is covered by Medicare and most major insurance plans. Focal laser treatment is usually done in a single session.

To protect your vision, take prevention seriously. Start by carefully controlling your blood sugar level and scheduling yearly eye exams. If you have diabetes, see your eye doctor for a yearly dilated eye exam — even if your vision seems fine — because it’s important to detect diabetic retinopathy in the early stages.

To set up an appointment with Blue Laser Group, call 828-2-DR-BLUE.

CruiseOne specialists are knowledgeable in a broad range of cruise vacations ranging from family reunions at sea and honeymoon cruises to corporate meetings, incentives, ship charters and luxury cruises.

In July, Bryan & Tricia participated in the cruise industry’s most intensive training curriculum that included sales and marketing seminars, product briefings by major cruise lines, hands-on computer orientation and onboard ship inspections. The state-of-the-art CruiseOne training center in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., is considered among the best in the nation.

With more than 600 locations coast to coast, CruiseOne prides itself on providing attention to detail and expert advice to every customer. Each independently owned and operated business combines the latest technology with old-fashioned customer service. The automated best fare search program enables cruise specialists to identify excellent values on all major cruise lines.

“Congratulations to Bryan & Tricia upon successfully completing the CruiseOne certification program,” said Dwain Wall, senior vice president of CruiseOne. “The cruise industry is so large and complex that general service travel counselors cannot do justice to the cruise product or properly serve the needs of today’s cruise customer.”
