Zoning Board OK’s subdivision variance

At its November meeting, the Zoning Board of Adjustment OK’d a subdivision variance for 560 North Fifth Street.

The 1.11-acre plot, owned by the Bryson Family, is zoned R2, and currently houses three homes. Two that front Fifth Street and one that fronts Laurel Street, all on one lot with one tax bill.

The variance was to subdivide the plot into three separate parcels, each containing one dwelling. To subdivide the property into three parcels, the minimum lot size of 0.5 acres is required, per the current ordinance. However, the Brysons asked for permission to subdivide the property into three 0.37-acre parcels.

In response to Mr. Swanson’s Nov. 15 column

Dear Editor,

If only Mr. Swanson had stopped with his first sentence.... “I have no words to describe my feelings...” That would have been, perhaps still could be, a blessing to us all.

But rather than keep silence Mr. Swanson proceeded to dredge up supposedly “objective” comments from afar. Using such quotes keeps Mr. Swanson from personally articulating, and therefore taking responsibility for a theology shaped by loss and anger. He can attribute it to others and then simply endorse it.

The use of God to buttress any political position should bring an immediate caution. The invocation of God’s name raises the debate to an ultimate level – it aligns the speaker with divine intention – or at least that speaker’s interpretation of divine intention. To say, as one of those quoted by Mr. Swanson, that “America is being humbled by God…” admits of no humility on the part of the speaker. Rather there is an immense presumption of insight into the divine.

There is evidently a large number – or at least a large enough number – of people who reject Mr. Swanson’s interpretation, and align themselves with a God who is seen through the lens of what is deemed the greatest commandment: You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your strength, and with all your mind, and your neighbor as yourself.

I invite Mr. Swanson, after an appropriate period of silence for reflection, to abandon the false dichotomy of “revenge” and “Love of country” and look into what it means to “love your neighbor as yourself.”

That commandment does not seem to be about a sentimental feeling, or an unqualified acceptance of all perspectives on any situation or issue. It is about seeing need where it exists, taking action to meet that need, and extending care, both in the moment and for the long term. At least, that’s the illustration that Jesus gave when “love your neighbor as yourself” was countered with “who is my neighbor?”

The illustration also makes clear that “my neighbor” will most likely be someone who is NOT like me, in terms of ethnic or religious background, economic standing, education, employment – maybe even political affiliation. It is easy to love people who are like us, people with whom we can identify. It is more of a challenge to love people with different viewpoints, different hopes and dreams, different life experiences. But we can try.

In my next life, I wanna put the wet stuff on the hot stuff

Choose your eyes and picture this. A guy is lowered into a black hole in the ground that leads to a septic tank buried several feet underground to locate a very stupid 60-lb. dog that had fallen in. Now open your eyes so you can finish reading this. Subsequently, the dog was harnessed and hoisted out of the tank bringing cheers from the dog's owners and neighbors. I think they nicknamed the pointer-mix Stinky. I would have named him Stupid. All this happened on election night in Palm Beach County, FL, the land of stupid dogs and screwed up election officials.

The guy in the tank saving the dog's life was a Palm Beach firefighter from the Hazardous Material Response Team, proving that poop is, in fact, a hazardous material. Write that down. Now I'm really freaking 'cause I'm currently saving about 500 pounds of the stuff in my backyard. I know all about this because my oldest son is a Haz-Mat captain for Palm Beach County and was in charge of this dog and pony show. Oops, I mean dog and poop show. (Yes, it's an U-Tube.)

To further prove that Palm Beach firefighters do wild and crazy stuff, you might remember Hazcock, the station house rooster firefighters found wandering around in a nearby field. The rooster became their mascot and was named Hazcock by Haz Mat firefighters. Even Hazcock was smart enough not to walk into a black hole in the ground. Sadly, Hazcock became so mean they ate him for dinner. Ha, only kidding but they did have to ship him out 'cause he kept attacking firefighters, demanding he be allowed to rideshotgun. Once the FireChief bled, Hazcock was toast.

The purpose of this week's column is to prove, once and for all, that firefighters do everything good and wonderful while cops do everything mean and bad. I've discussed this with my son and he totally agrees.

Here's just a small example of what I mean. Brave macho firefighters save stupid dogs from septic tanks and even more stupid horses from mud holes. They get national notoriety, are given awards, free food, etc. Firefighters also save your home from fire and rescue people from burning buildings. They go to car crashes and use their jaws-of-life to pry open burning cars and remove people who are about to die. They save heart attack victims near death, stabilize them, and get them to hospitals still alive. They give out Halloween candy and get to meet hot babe mothers who ask if they can be shown around the firehouse and want to know where they sleep. They share sleeping quarters with gorgeous knock your socks off single firefighter women. Firefighter males pose half naked for pictures so they can show off their muscles for calendars. Firefighter women pose half naked to show off their bodacious TA TA's for calendars. And I could go on and on but, as a retired cop, I'm making myself sick.

To further prove my point, here's a short list of what cops do regularly. For starters, cops would never be lowered into a hole 'cause most are too fat to fit in. Wait...that's unfair. They might squeeze in but they would never get them out. Cops knock on doors in the middle of the night to inform loved ones a family member was killed in an auto accident. They knock on doors in the middle of the night to inform loved ones a family member was killed in an auto accident. They knock on doors in the middle of the night to inform loved ones a family member was killed in an auto accident.

The View from Here

Times call for shared sacrifices

A few Republican congressmen, including South Carolina senator, Lindsey Graham, are backing away from their pledge against voting for higher taxes. Good for them. Let’s hope their example is contagious.

In the recent election, 238 of 242 Republican House members and 41 of 47 Senators promised they would not support an increase in marginal tax rates.

With the fiscal cliff looming, it’s about time we relearned the art of compromise. None of us, except Warren Buffet, wants to pay higher taxes, but a growing number of Americans recognizes the need for compromise and the need for sacrifice. America needs to tighten its belt. Spending has gone wild. Our government runs on borrowed money. An aging population has dramatically increased the demand on government services, notably Social Security and Medicare. The trend will not be reversed in the foreseeable future.

Fewer workers supporting more retirees sets the stage for generational conflict. It’s time for AARP and the millions it represents to get on board. It’s time for liberal Democrats to get on board, and it’s time for Republicans to pitch in, too.

Our country has a rich heritage of sacrifice. In times of war, we’ve asked the ultimate sacrifice from hundreds of thousands of our young people. Today, we pay homage to the military, but there is no sacrifice in sticking a magnetic yellow ribbon on the trunk of a car, or pinning an American flag in your lapel. It’s easy and trendy to thank a soldier for his service. Some travelers buy a service person a beer or Coke at the airport. We spend billions for the most advanced weapons to lessen their risk, but none of this constitutes sacrifice for the American population. The vast majority of us are untouched by war. We no longer ask sacrifice from our young people. We pay for a volunteer Army. Sacrifice is out of vogue.

Among the more memorable words spoken by an American president were those of John F. Kennedy, who said, “Ask not what your country can do for you. Ask what you can do for your country.”

The tradition of service and sacrifice is dormant, if not dead in this country. The elderly refuse to participate. The poor enjoy the fruits of others’ labor. The wealthy are unwilling to pay higher taxes, and corporations refuse to give up costly privileges. And we are led by elected officials who have shown interest in the welfare of the country, whose only ambition is reelection, and whose major activity is raising money for the next campaign.

Until, and unless, Americans demand more of their leaders we will have more of the same. No group is willing to sacrifice. We vote for those candidates who promise us a bigger bite of a shrinking pie, rather than those who pledge to work together to address the monumental financial crisis we face.

If we continue to follow the example of western European social democracies, we face a fate similar to those of Greece and Spain.

It is so obvious that we need both reduced spending and increased revenue to correct our financial ills. The solution calls for shared sacrifice.

When will our leaders, and voters who send them to Washington come to grips with this reality?
A cat named Weasel, Part I

"I t's cancer," said the vet. Funny how that hits you right in the gut, no matter how many times you hear it. And I'd heard it too often, first with my French grandfather, then Daddy, Orion, John, and now Weasel. Sweet Weasel, who'd been such a comfort when John died, whose huge green eyes seemed to reach into my soul. In fact, both cats, Orion and Weasel, had kept me going on days when I would have stayed in bed with the covers over my head, if I hadn't had to feed and groom the cats, and handle litter box duty.

Thanksgiving 2005 was the first time in years I hadn't spent Thanksgiving in Colorado with my brother and his family. I chose instead to venture down to Highlands to spend the holiday with John and the furry people. In those days, John had three cats – a little black and white tuxedo female, Smidgen, a large Dreamsicle (orange and white) male, Orion, and a beautiful female, Weasel. Weasel was either a calico, a tortoiseshell, a torbie (tortoiseshell tabby), or a brindle. Her beautiful coat contained many colors, and as befitted the lady she was, her wardrobe included a pristine white bib, and four matching white paws with pink and black pads. Weasel had a splash of brown across her forehead, and the most marvelous huge green eyes.

Like my father, John had grown up in an almost exclusively dog household. Cats were for sissies, or so they thought. That made the devotion of these big, tall guys to their cats even more precious. By the time I came down to Highlands that first Thanksgiving, John was resolutely a cat person. If Weasel seems an odd name for a cat, her original name was even stranger. Her previous owners had named her “Dweezil” after iconic rock legend Frank Zappa’s son of the same name. I guess she was lucky they hadn’t named her Moon Unit, after his daughter! I don’t think Weasie had an easy time of it before she came to live with John. She was often wide eyed and anxious, as if she wasn’t convinced the world was a safe place. Then and there, I determined that for all of the cats, I would make sure it would be.

It didn’t take me long to realize that Weasel was the smartest of the three cats. She delighted in sitting in front of her food bowl, flicking dried morsels into the water bowl with her paw, and then fishing them out when they reached the desired moistness. Maman loved all the cats, but Weasie had an easy time of it. She was often wide eyed and anxious, as if she wasn’t convinced the world was a safe place. Then and there, I determined that for all of the cats, I would make sure it would be.

Kettlerock had no finished basement, but a crawl space with a dirt floor. This meant that mice were a constant problem, especially in cold or rainy weather, when they would come upstairs for warmth. Fortunately, all three cats were excellent mousers, but perhaps none as competent as Weasel. One chilly evening, I awoke up to find Weasel on top of the duvet, hopping around in an agitated manner. I reached down to find her playing with what I thought was a mouse toy. I grabbed it by the tail and flung it onto the floor. “Bad Weasel!” I chided. “Why don’t you play with your medicine container?” She was astounded, but not amused. The lady she was, her wardrobe included many colors, and as befit the lady she was, her wardrobe included a pristine white bib, and four matching white paws with pink and black pads. Weasel had a splash of brown across her forehead, and the most marvelous huge green eyes.

Maman loved all the cats, but only Weasie jumped on top of the bed once my mother had settled in for the night. My mother found the lady she was, her wardrobe included many colors, and as befit the lady she was, her wardrobe included a pristine white bib, and four matching white paws with pink and black pads. Weasel had a splash of brown across her forehead, and the most marvelous huge green eyes.

It’s not how you start, it’s how you finish...except in college football

Every once in a while, I manage to work my self into a tizzy and go on a really good rant, and while the seeds of this were planted in my column against the BCS last week, the results of this past weekend in college football were enough to send me over the edge.

In all honesty, there is absolutely no legitimate argument for the Alabama Crimson Tide to be the second ranked team in the nation. None. Zero. Zilch. And yet, they are, and the reason that they are is because they started the season ranked #2 in the nation, and despite not doing anything to earn that ranking, that is where they stand. Out of the twelve games that they have played, Alabama has only beaten 4 teams with a winning record. One of those four teams is Western Kentucky, who is 4-4 in the Sun Belt Conference. Alabama’s lone quality win on the season is a win at LSU in which they were outgained by 100+yards. The Tide is 1-1 against the BCS top 15, and played one of the weakest conference schedules in recent memory, avoiding the top 3 teams in the SEC East entirely. Despite all of these hard numbers, Alabama continues to be ranked #2 in the nation by the AP and Coaches Poll voters who obviously base their votes on the Tide performance in recent years and not the reality of this season.

Now don’t get me wrong—I’m not saying Alabama is a patsy, and they may well beat UGA on Saturday and play for a BCS Championship (although my money is on Georgia). This rant is more about the final a year of a system that has caused us to endlessly complain about the lack of a playoff. It’s also about the unfairness of a system that cares way more about the perception bestowed upon a team at the beginning of the season, rather than what that team has done on the field.

To continue with this ridiculousness, Alabama Coach Nick Saban had the absolute nerve to say at an SEC media conference on Monday that it was a shame that the loser of the SEC Championship would be relegated to a non-BCS bowl. Due to Florida being ranked 4th in the BCS, they will move up to 3rd after the SEC Championship and therefore be locked in to the Sugar Bowl. Saban’s argument is that since Florida did not win the SEC East, then they should not be a BCS bowl team. Naturally, Saban’s argument just ONE YEAR AGO was that strength of schedule should be the determining factor in a birth in the BCS Championship and not whether or not a team has won the conference championship. No one who has listened to Saban at all over the years is surprised by this bit of blatant hypocrisy, but yet it is still entertaining in the same sort of way that it is when Jon Stewart plays clips of Fox News pundits contradicting themselves.

It’s not how you start, it’s how you finish...except in college football.
THE CONSERVATIVE POV

Happy Thanksgiving?

As usual, with a complete lack of ideas on what to write about, I went to Drudge for inspiration. I was met by the following headlines. ‘Gang fight’ at Black Friday sale…Man punched in Face Pulls Gun On Line-Cutting shopper…shots fired outside WALMART…Shoppers smash through door at URBAN OUTFITTERS…Customers run over in parking lot…Woman busted after throwing merchandise…Thousands storm VICTORIA’S SECRET…Insane battle over phones…Mayhem at Nebraska mall where 9 murdered in 2007…Shoplifter tries to mace security guards…Men steal boy’s shopping bag outside BED, BATH & BEYOND…Heckler calls them zombies.

Well, inspired I’m not. I’m sure there is some redeeming social value in Black Friday sales, but when they spill backwards into Thanksgiving afternoon and evening, it seems we may have lost the meaning of Thanksgiving. I’m not concerned about retail sales people having to work on what used to pass for a holiday. They knew the rules of the game when they hired on. I’m concerned that we, as a society, can’t devote one day out of hundreds to be thankful. To cleanse our minds of material procurement for a few hours and share time with friends and family being thankful for what we have would seem to have a beneficial effect. Oh well, it’s wishful thinking.

On another front, the labor unions seem to feel it’s time to finish wrecking the economy and disrupt human activity, particularly regarding air travel. At a time when job creation has been the mantra of politicians, the unions are busy at job destruction. The Hostess Bakery debacle is a perfect example of their handiwork. Hostess, as you know, made and sold Twinkies, Ho-Ho’s and other goodies for years.

From the hostessbrands.com website: “Hostess Brands is Closed. We are sorry to announce that Hostess Brands, Inc. has been forced by a Bakers Union strike to shut down all operations and sell all company assets. Hostess Brands, Inc announced that the US Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York approved its emergency motion for the orderly wind down of its business and sale of its assets.

Hostess Brands is winding down the Company after a nationwide strike initiated by the Bakery, Confectionary, Tobacco and Grain Millers Union that commenced on November 9th crippled its operations at a time when the company lacked the financial resources..."

Highlanders drop pair to Hayesville

By Ryan Potts

The Highlands Highlands hosted the Hayesville Yellow Jackets in their first home game of the season last Tuesday. The Lady Highlands looked to bounce back from a loss to Towns County, and the Highlands looked to build upon their win in the opener against Towns County.

The Lady Highlands were expecting pressure from the get-go against a Hayesville team that boasts its' strongest girls lineup in years. As in the Towns County game, the Lady Highlands struggled against the pressure early, falling behind by double digits but found a rhythm towards the end of the first quarter and cut the Hayesville lead to just 4 points. Unfortunately, that would be the last of the good news for the Lady Highlands on the scoreboard, as they fell further behind in what would be a 63-30 defeat to the much more experienced Lady Jackets. Junior Emily Shuler led the Lady Highlanders with 10 points.

The Highlands came into the game with Hayesville looking to upset a Yellow Jacket team that was undefeated in the regular season last year and returned 3 starters from that team. Highlands came out strong early, taking a 9-7 lead at the end of the first quarter and leading virtually the entire first half before a pair of turnovers in the final minute gave Hayesville a 25-23 halftime lead. Hayesville extended their lead out to as many as 14 in the second half before a final push from the home team cut the deficit to just 4 points with 90 seconds to play. The Highlands would get no closer, however, and Hayesville prevailed with a 63-54 victory. Taylor Osteen led the Highlands with 24 points.

That is admirable and we all should pattern our love for Macon County after him,” he said.

Ronnie Beale, the commissioner who served the longest with Kuppers, said he brought a level of integrity and intelligence to the board that set a new standard. “That’s just a fact,” he said. “He offered a spirit of cooperation to this board when we needed it. He knew what was going on about any subject and if not supportive of it, he always had the discussion.”

Kuppers had much to say and began by thanking the county staff from department heads on down.

“There are a lot of people to thank and a lot of water under the bridge in four years. The county employees need to be thanked more than anyone else. They don’t know how hard they work.”

He may have set precedent when he thanked the press.

“These poor people are here every meeting and they take a beating. We schedule meetings, we recess meetings to all hours of the night and they sit right here with us and dang if they don’t write the truth the next day. Sometimes you wish they wouldn’t but they do. They have never treated me badly in four years and they’ve always told the truth. There have been times I’ve wished they had gotten a quote a little bit wrong, but when I say it I deserve to read about it. I thank you for your efforts. You keep us informed,” he said.

He had kind words for his fellow commissioners, too.

“This is a great county and a great board. Don’t ever stop having the conversation because when you do you become a victim of partisan politics and when that happens, you are worthless to the citizens of Macon County.

“If the only reason you are doing something back here behind this board is because your party wants you to do it, that’s a shame and you ought to be fired.

“You need to do it because the people of Macon County need it done. We’ve always done that behind this board in the four years I’ve been here. I trust that will continue. I thank you; it has been a great run and an honor.

Highlands School renovations

After a brief reception for Kuppers, the board reconvened and discussed and unanimously approved moving forward with the QZAB funding for renovations at Highlands School.

Over the years the county has used Qualified Zone Academy Bonds (QZAB) to renovate area schools. These are typically low interest loans that come with stipulations.

This time the $1.5 million borrowed under the QZAB umbrella is available at 0% interest.

Horton said the $1.5 million won’t take the school all the way it needs to go, but it will help.

QZAB funding requirements include a 10% match over a 10-year period from local, non-government sources - $150,000 in this case.

Highlands Country Club has committed the $150,000 in funds and in-kind services.

"This work is definitely needed and I want to give Highlands Country Club a plug for stepping up to the plate for the Highlands community. We are very grateful," said Commissioner Tate.

The items to be renovated with the $1.5 million are replacement of the 1970 boiler and piping; spray insulation in all areas above the ceiling and around new pipes; new drop tile ceilings in a 2x2 grid; new T-8 high efficiency lighting; window air conditioning units and radiator heating replaced with through-the-wall Bard units like the rest of the schools in the county; new floor tile in the elementary wingrooms, and new paint in all areas.

The Highlands gym debt, which was a little more than $2 million, will be retired June 2013, so the board agreed to assume the new debt.

"Since we are retiring a debt, we won't have to accommodate this new debt with an additional tax rate or revenues," said Corbin.

QZAB funding must be approved by the Local Government Commission (LGC) at its meeting in February after the county has an architectural agreement and bids in hand. The board is moving ahead with the process but won't issue the debt until the gym debt is retired.

"I would be reluctant to do this if we couldn't do it with existing funds," said Corbin. "This is a smaller amount of money - the gym was over $2 million - and at 0% interest, so there is no increase in budget to accomplish this."

It's likely the QZAB loan will be over a 14-year period with a $107,000 per year payment.

Refinancing county debt
Meanwhile, Finance Director Lori Hall has negotiated with BB&T to lower interest rates on all the county's loans which will save the county a lot of money.

"With interest rates as attractive as they are right now, we refinanced and saved the county $250,000 on two of our smaller loans," she said.

She is now negotiating the 20-year, 4.59% interest loan the county got with BB&T in 2008 for new schools.

In the course of those conversations, Limited Obligation Bonds came to light which could save the county between $800,000 to $2 million on the $15.5 million it is paying back.

The interest rate could fall as low as 2.35% and commissioners agreed to hire First Tryon Advisors to guide them through and successfully close a bond deal.

The firm's fee will be about $31,000 but is 100% contingent upon a successful closing.

There is a special called commission meeting Monday, Dec. 3 at 6 p.m. when newly elected commissioners will be sworn in. The next regular meeting is Tuesday, Dec. 11 at 6 p.m.

your mousie on the floor?” I had almost fallen back to sleep when I remembered that none of the mouse toys still had their tails attached. This meant that what Weasel had decided to bring as room service was the real deal. I dug John in the ribs, and informed him of Weasel’s special delivery. He mumbled, “Good girl, Weasel,” rolled over, and went back to sleep.

While Weasel loved both of her parents, she was most resolutely Daddy’s girl. She waited until John settled himself into his armchair, television news channel blaring, laptop computer on his tummy. She then settled onto the arm rest, snuzzling against him. I often came into the living room to find them both soundly sleeping—and snoring. John’s cancer had done little to change the routine. I fed and watered the cats, steered myself to litter box duty, and assured a supply of cat toys. John provided his usual lap and cuddles. Eventually, I even took on mouse disposal duties, though never gladly.

On August 20th, John died in Asheville, and I spent eight hours with him before the funeral director took him away. I can only think that’s why Weasel greeted me the way she did. Upon returning to the house later that evening, both cats rushed in the hall to meet me. Weasel stopped dead in her tracks, sniffed my pants legs and let out the most heart rending yowl of grief. Both cats mourned John, but Weasel most of all. She slept on his pillow for hours on end, only leaving to eat and use the facilities.

And then, one day, we all had to leave. I loaded the cats into two carriers, and walked out to the car in the driving rain. The cats wailed. I sobbed. It was not a good day. Upon arriving at our new digs above the book shop, I opened the doors to the carriers. Orion bolted from his, and joined his sister in her carrier. The two huddled together like storm-tossed refugees. I knew how they felt. Eventually the cats became town cats, learning to find that warm ray of sunshine in the bay window, or later on the enclosed porch. They learned about barking dogs walking past the window, and the sound of the garbage truck. While they dutifully played with the cat toys I provided, I wondered if they missed the mice, and the thrill of the chase. We moved three times in two years. Each time, the cats panicked at first, until they established new routines and found new hidey holes. Without realizing it, Orion and Weasel made each place a home. And then, last month, Weasel began to cough.

The houses were put on the property before there was a zoning ordinance and as situated happen to comply with all current setback requirements. Though not in compliance with current lot size stipulations, the property complies with the watershed built-upon requirements.

The property is located within the Watershed 3 – Balance of Watershed, the least restrictive of the Watershed Districts. Though it, too, requires a 0.5 acre minimum lot size, Julie Ventaloro, coordinator for the Water Supply Watershed Protection Program, NC Division of Water Quality, Wetlands & Stormwater Branch, said as long as each of the three lots meet the 24% built-upon area (which they would), according to her, the variance would be considered a Minor Variance and would not require a variance from the NC Environmental Management Commission.

Mike Bryson said for any of the homes to be sold the properties have to be separated. He said the family also hopes to renovate and possibly rebuild the homes.

Code Enforcement Officer Josh Ward said as long as they stay under the 24% built-upon and stay within the setbacks, they wouldn’t have to keep the old footprint, but if they didn’t subdivide, they would have to renovate to the footprint.

Chairman Steve Chenoweth said that the Brysons are asking for what is currently there now – which is out of compliance due to the zoning ordinance.

“Those didn’t create the issue as it was permitted back then and it appears that the ordinance presently in place has created the difficulty for the owner,” he said.

Member Charles Dasher said if they are going to ultimately build new residences, in his mind they would have to meet the current zoning requirements.

Vice Chairman John Underwood said that the only thing non-conforming about the situation is the lot sizes.

In the end, the board voted 4 to 1 to grant the variance with Charlie Dasher voting no.

Next, the subdivision application goes to the Planning Board and the Town Board for preliminary and final plat approval.

The state’s new testing procedures that takes place next month. But it’s possible that the system could be hired in the future.

McCall voted against that move for the same reasons.

“I always think that if we have to lose personnel, it should be a support person not a person in the classroom,” she said.

Budget woes caused by decreased funding from the state have forced many Local Education Agencies in Western North Carolina to look for ways to cut spending, and one of the methods used has been to not fill a position after a resignation or retirement.

Macon County, in particular, has been able to trim its budget in this manner while avoiding the teacher layoffs (also known as reduction-in-force) that have plagued some of the neighboring counties in recent years.

While the decision by the BOE not to fill this position at Highlands is certainly difficult to swallow, Highlands Principal Brian Jetter is taking the decision in stride.

“The system has been leaving unfilled a number of positions at different schools throughout the county due to the budget cuts required by the state,” said Jetter. “And, while we never want to lose a position, this is the first position we have not been able to fill since the state budget cutting began. We are covering Mrs. Keener’s duties internally to assist the 1st grade teacher. Hopefully, we’ll be able to fill this position in the future.”

Macon County Director of Personnel Dan Moore also echoed the sentiment that while it is always tough to lose a position at a school, the current financial situation of the county determines what decisions must be made in regards to personnel.

“The Macon County School district will experience a funding shortfall of approximately $551,000 prior to the end of the 2012-13 school year,” said Moore. “All employment vacancies incurred after the beginning of this school year are being examined in an effort to meet this funding shortfall.”

Enrollment at Highlands School has dropped in recent years, with the Average Daily Membership (ADM) at Highlands down to 348, with just 105 in the high school portion of the school. Smaller enrollment numbers mean smaller class sizes, but they also open up the school to more position cuts in certain areas that the state determines through ADM numbers.

The next regular BOE meeting is Monday, Dec. 10 at 6 p.m. in the administration office in Franklin.

night to serve a search warrant for drugs and then carry loved ones off to jail after finding a tiny amount of grass in their bedroom drawer but miss the mother lode hidden in a secret place.

Cops issue traffic tickets to people who don't deserve them for infractions they didn't commit. They pull people over and then humiliate then by making them take a breathalyzer test for drunk driving right in front of their mother-in-law who is sitting in the backseat and glaring. They cart drivers off to jail even though they say, “maybe a couple of beers after work is all.”

Cops wrestle and sometimes knock down deadbeat husbands of bloody battered women to the horror of their little crying children watching their daddies eventually get handcuffed and carted off to jail. I could go on and on but I have to go and throw up. In my next life, I wanna put the wet stuff on the hot stuff.

Oh, I almost forgot. Guess who was picked to go into the septic tank for the stupid dog? No, it wasn't the stupidest firefighter present; it was the smallest firefighter present. Sometimes being big and tall is good….sometimes not. And I’m happy to report that stupid Shelley, aka Stinky, is doing fine but stupid Palm Beach County election workers, as of today, are still scratching their heads and counting election ballots. Duh!
