Lowered lake reveals a lost slice of history

By Ran Shaffner

A unique part of Highlands history has emerged from the floor of Lake Sequoyah, which was drained recently for repair work on the dam and water intake. On February 13th, while walking the banks of the lake, Chip Wisdom discovered an old boat half-buried in the sand and clay. He rightly concluded it belonged to Joe Webb’s stepson and partner Furman Vinson, who lost it eighty-five years ago during an accident on the lake.

Peggy Watkins related the unfortunate event in her 1995 book on Webbmont. Kenyon Zahner had hired Joe Webb and Furman Vinson in 1930 to build a cabin on the edge of the new Lake Sequoyah west of the Big Creek bridge. In describing a boat landing that was constructed underneath the house, Watkins said, “Furman Vinson had built a boat which was used for removing the dirt from this space; but one day there was a slight mishap. A little tomfoolery, and over-estimating the capacity of the boat, slowed the progress of dirt removal considerably. Guess where the boat is today!? Still at the bottom of the lake – shovels, picks and all!”

Chip Wisdom’s discovery confirms the story of Furman Vinson’s boat, which still holds the dirt that sank it and presumably the hydroelectric plant in 1925. “They basically said, ‘It’s yours as long as you use it,’” he said.

Highlands forefathers had a quick claim deed drawn up to ensure clear title to the Sequoyah environs.

According to Mayor Pat Taylor, the town can’t find any record of ever owning the plant property but understands it was given permission by the USFS to use the property to build both the Lake Sequoyah Dam and the Cullasaja River which the town abandoned in 1969 when it opted to purchase power from Nantahala Power & Light.

With the plant abandoned and the town’s Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) license allowed to expire in 1996, Highlands basically relinquished “ownership” of the structure and its environs.

How much is/could/should Macon County invest(ing) in education?

It’s budget time – that time of year when representatives across the county try to figure out how much money they and their subsidiaries will need for the next fiscal year.

For years now, the Macon County Board of Education (BOE) has struggled to meet operational costs while the county has diligently worked to ensure the school district’s capital and other needs are met – as required by state law.

Technically, under North Carolina’s school finance system, born more than eight decades ago, it is the state’s responsibility to pay for instructional expenses (including personnel) while county governments pay for capital expenses (buildings and maintenance).

Over time, however, the lines drawn in the 1933 and 1975 laws have become blurred, and the local role in funding school operations has increased.

In 2012-13, counties spent $2.98 billion to fund instructional expenses, accounting for 25 percent of the combined federal, state, and local total. Counties provided funding for 1,003 principals and assistant principals (18.7 percent of the total), 6,296 teachers (6.4 percent of the total), 2,222 teacher assistants (8.8 percent of the total), and 2,932 professional instructional support personnel (19.6 percent of the total).

How much is enough and how does Macon County compare statewide?

The 2014 Local School Finance Study focuses not only on the amount that counties spend on schools, but also on each county’s investment in the context of that county’s taxable resources.

Obviously, wealthier counties are able to spend more on schools with less taxing effort. Because wealthier counties have
I paid a $650 electric bill to the Town of Highlands in January. No, not this January, but back in 2000. Sallie and I had just moved to Highlands and found our dream house on Pinecrest.

The winter seems to always be “the season of our discontent,” especially when it comes to electric bills. I could have said the town was price gouging us on electricity. I hear some folks are making that claim on Facebook now. But that was 15 years ago and the town was tapped into that dirt cheap Nantahala Power hydro electricity instead of buying from Duke as done now. When Duke bought Nantahala the town eventually saw a 22% wholesale rate increase back in 2012.

The winter seems to always be “the season of our discontent,” especially when it comes to electric bills. I could have said the town was price gouging us on electricity. I hear some folks are making that claim on Facebook now. But that was 15 years ago and the town was tapped into that dirt cheap Nantahala Power hydro electricity instead of buying from Duke as done now. When Duke bought Nantahala the town eventually saw a 22% wholesale rate increase back in 2012.

The truth is that back in the summer of 1999 we had bought an old seasonal home that needed work. Prior to our first winter in our new home, it had been winterized and closed every year no later than the end of October. The water drainage system was an engineering marvel that I have yet to fully understand to this day.

Our German chalet house had vintage 1960 style electric baseboard heaters. Furthermore, being a seasonal home it was outfitted with single pane, aluminum clad windows including a big sliding glass door. Above the sliding glass door was a 10’x10’ picture window also with single pane glass. There was 3 1/2 inch thick fiberglass insulation in the walls.

Instead of sheet rock, the interior walls had 1/4 inch fake wood paneling attached loosely to the studs with 3/4 inch brads. There was absolutely no insulation in the cathedral ceiling, so heat moved easily through the 3/4 inch thick tongue and groove roof. The former homeowners did not worry about energy efficiency, a fireplace and electric baseboard heaters would do just fine for the cool fall and spring nights. They probably thought someone would have to be crazy to try to live in the house during winter.

Us crazy folks discovered that whether cranking up the heaters to high, or burning the fireplace to maximum efficiency, or both, we were never able to get our house above 52 degrees that first winter. We huddled around a roaring fire many nights to keep warm. I burned every piece of wood I could find. To add insult to our shivering cold, was a $650 electric bill for heating a mere 800 square feet of living space to only 52 degrees! Our downstairs basement remained closed. We were always on the verge of freezing, but nevertheless loved being in Highlands.

As soon as winter ended, I installed double pane, high efficiency windows and doors. We also bought new high efficiency baseboard heaters. Our electric bills that second winter went down to about $500 a month.

The following year we purchased a used Black Bart fireplace stove insert with a motorized Heatilator. I could buy a pickup truck load of oak flooring waste pieces from Nantahala Lumber Company for a mere $20. Oh my, instead of 52 degrees of that first year, we could now heat the house to 80 degrees for only $20 every two weeks. Our electricity usage diminished significantly, but our health issues during that winter increased proportionally with our reliance on dry, wood heat.

Several years later we remodeled our house. Electric base boards were replaced with a central heating system fueled with propane. The 1/4 inch paneling was replaced with Sheetrock. Insulation was placed in the ceiling. The chronic winter health problems went away, as did those high electric bills. Our propane gas bills went up, so there was somewhat of a trade off. Anyway you cut it, energy costs in the winter can be high when you live in Highlands, an area that has a planting zone rating to that of upstate New York.

So where am I going with this story? When heating with electricity in the winter in Highlands, bills can be high. That is especially true if you have an old home with poor insulation. Also, if you are using a heat pump, the same holds true once the temperature hits freezing. When it is single digits or below like last week all bets on saving energy are off.

Propane costs can be high, too. Some tell me Highlands could solve this problem by piping in that cheap, fracked gas up here to the plateau. On the other hand, by the time we pay for the pipeline and distribution system, that natural gas may not be any cheaper than propane or electricity.

Last week an outage on our line to Horse Cove was called in. The electric crew had the power restored in about 30 minutes. Town staff even called people back to make sure the power was back on. Duke would have responded in a matter of a few hours.

With all this said, at the upcoming retreat the staff and board will be reviewing our electric and other utility policies, fees, billing and methods for payment. For the past several years the staff has been studying how other utilities address these issues and have applied standard and best practices to our system. They continue to look for ways to improve service to customers and to enhance the operation of the system.

Dear Editor,

My family has had a home in Highlands since before I was born in 1936. As a child we drove from Memphis, Tennessee to Highlands every summer. We stayed at Cabin Ben on Mirror Lake. One activity we wanted to do each year was to go to Satulah mountain top. The best times were when we had a picnic, and saw the sunset.

I am sorry to learn that private interests have prevailed over the public good by blocking access to the summit, which is for the use and enjoyment of all of the people of Highlands forever.

I am not a physical resident of Highlands, but the town resides in my heart and my memory as one of the places where I have been the happiest. I support the Greenway project. Highlands without access to Satulah is a sad place.

Of the thirty-six log cabins attributed to Joe Webb, the Zahner house was among the first dozen built and one of the most remarkable for its rustic design. Plans are being made to retrieve the boat before the lake is refilled. The Highlands Historical Society has expressed an interest in preserving it as an integral part of Joe Webb lore and early Highlands history.

more taxable resources, they can keep taxes low while still generating significant revenues. Conversely, counties with fewer taxable resources need to make greater taxing effort to support their schools at comparable levels.

Mountain and coastal areas, along with high-growth parts of the Piedmont, account for most of the counties above the state average.

Of the state’s 100 counties, Macon County is in the Top Quartile based on real estate wealth available per student.

The 2012-13 spending per student in Macon County was $1,660.93 and the state average is $1,462.

The report ranked counties based on Property Value Rank - Adjusted Property Tax Base per Average Daily Membership (ADM); Actual Effort Rank - Total Current Spending per ADM; Actual Effort Rank per ADM with Low Wealth and Small County Funding; and Ability to Pay Rank - Revenue per ADM; and Effort Rank - Current spending as percentage of Revenue per student.

Given its property values, on face value it looks like Macon County could budget more per child yet its rankings per category vary greatly.

Property Value Rank (Adjusted Property Tax Base per ADM) Macon County ranks 8th in the state;

Actual Effort Rank (Total Current Spending per ADM) Macon County ranks 24th in the state;

Actual Effort Rank per ADM with Low Wealth and Small County Funding Macon County ranks 59th in the state;

Ability to Pay Rank (Revenue per ADM) Macon County ranks 9th in the state; and Effort Rank (Current spending as percentage of Revenue per student) Macon County ranks 93rd in the state.

But according to MC Schools Superintendent Dr. Chris Baldwin, face value figures and percentages are only part of the story.

“Macon County faces several unique challenges with regard to school funding. As the School Finance Study points out, Macon County is one of the wealthiest counties in North Carolina in terms of property values. Therefore, we have some room to increase revenue in support of schools. However, this report fails to point out that Macon County is also a Tier 1 county, which means it has a high poverty rate. It is also important to note that property value rather than our county’s poverty impacts the amount of state funding that we receive for schools,” he said.

MC Commission Vice Chair Jim Tate agrees.

“According to the study, the state says we could be providing more funds to our schools based upon availability, but according to the Dept. of Commerce, Macon County is deemed a ‘Tier 1’ county meaning it is one of the most economically distressed in the state with almost 20% of our residents classified as meeting the federal poverty level. It sounds like the state needs to cross communicate better,” said Tate.

According to MC Chair Kevin Corbin property values skew the equation.

“Ability to pay” is basically the tax valuation divided by the number of students. We have a relatively high valuation (largely due to Highlands properties) and at the same time a relatively small number of students. Those factors make us a ‘high ability to pay’ county but don’t take into account the income levels or other economic factors,” said Corbin.

Over time the delineations proscribed by the School Machinery Acts of 1933 and the School Budget and Fiscal Control Act of 1975 have given way to increased local investment in instructional expenses.

“Fortunately, for our students, our county commissioners have provided our schools with funding that exceeds the state average in per-pupil funding. And while our local per-pupil funding is outstanding, our total per-pupil funding is lower than many of the other districts in our region and state due to our inability to qualify for Low Wealth Funds and Small School Funds. This puts our students at a disadvantage,” said Baldwin.

In 1991, the state enacted supplemental funds for low-wealth and small counties, in part to address the limited capacity that some counties have to raise revenues divided by the number of students. We have a relatively high valuation per student.

Wealth Funds and Small School Funds.

Due to Macon County’s property values, our school system does not qualify for or receive Low Wealth funding from the state,” said Baldwin. “Additionally, while Macon County has two small K-12 schools district’s total enrollment exceeds the maximum number that would qualify us for Small Schools funding.”

With his dual role as a parent of Macon County School children and a MC Commissioner and therefore a steward of the county’s coffers, Tate is torn.

“As a parent of two Macon county students, I am very proud of the level of funds that we have been able to provide our schools without raising taxes, but at the same time, I am very aware that our schools could use more funds. So, I have been researching alternative means of increasing the school revenue without raising property taxes, such as by increasing our sales tax by 1/4%,” said Tate. “This balancing situation of providing the best for our kids while not being an overburden to our citizens’ pocket books is a very tough and complex issue. We as commissioners study this problem diligently (and it haunts my mind daily) with the hopes of Dam property, but unfortunately nothing was done to protect the powerhouse property.

Since 1969 the plant has sat abandoned and around 1970 the turbine was removed and sold to a company in north Georgia where it is said to be in use even today.

Now with green energy the hot topic, Advanced Hydropower, a company from Peachtree City, GA (originally from Clover, SC) applied for and late 2014 received permission to pursue a FERC license to resurrect the plant for the purposes of selling the 3/4 megawatts of energy it could generate back to the Duke Power grid to the tune of $225,000 to $250,000 a year.

In 2013 the town considered resurrecting the plant for the same reason – with the profits going to the town – but learned it would take $4-$5 million to get it up and running and likely 20 years to service and pay off the loan before a clear profit was realized.

Last November, when the Town Board learned of Advanced Hydropower’s plans, commissioners were taken by surprise. On one hand they said they didn’t know if they wanted to make the long-term investment themselves, but on the other hand, they weren’t too keen on the idea of an “outsider” coming into town and reaping the benefits.

So now camps are lining up behind resurrecting the hydroelectric plant below Bridal Veil Falls; investing the town’s money elsewhere; or jumping the hurdles to make the plant an historic/educational/recreation site.

Though Advanced Hydropower’s FERC application was accepted, the town of Highlands and about 22 other organizations are stakeholders in the project and will all have a say along the five-year trek prior to Advance Hydropower’s project coming to fruition.

There is also the chance that after submitting all the required permits and completing the required studies, Advanced Hydropower may decide not to proceed.

Mayor Taylor said if the town sought a FERC license at this point, it would look like the town was trying to block Advanced Hydropower’s move and so for the town’s application to be considered it would have to be serious about investing millions and demonstrate those intentions quickly.

“The town could have intervened if it was committed to applying for and rebuilding the plant. But given the short notice before FERC gave Advanced Hydropower clearance to apply for the license, the town didn’t have a chance to consider it. Still, I don’t see the board wanting to get in the hydro business after 50 years,” said Mayor Taylor.

Now the question is should the town pursue the historical angle and if so, would it affect the FERC process in the works?

Mayor Taylor said he believes the Town Board would be supportive of the effort if the Historical Society wanted to pursue it.

“But, I am not sure how that would impact the status of the FERC application at this point in time,” he said.

According to Ran Shaffner, Highlands resident historian, it might take a year to get the plant on the National Register but being on the National Register wouldn’t protect the plant unless the town designates it protected by ordinance; otherwise, being on the National Register is only an honor.

“I believe the strategy at the moment is to delay Advanced Hydropower’s application through the environmental hoops for five or six years until it decides another site is more accessible with fewer battles to fight. US 64 west is already a scenic byway with many legitimate environmental concerns to address,” said Shaffner.

Shaffner said If the town wants to put the plant on the National Register, a providing the best balancing act that we can.”

Superintendent Baldwin says the school board has been grappling with budget issues for years – it is currently worrying about paying this year’s bills while readying to work on the 2015-16 budget.

“We have been dealing with these funding issues for a long time. Macon County teachers and students have always been asked to do more with less due to the challenges that are unique to our county. They have always risen to the challenge and today we have a school system that we can all be proud of. As we continue to face significant changes to the way our schools are funded by the state we have to realize that there comes a point when we begin to do less with less for our students. I am sure that no one in our county wishes to reach that point,” he said.

Tate said unfortunately the 2014 Local School Funding Report doesn’t take into account the money the county has invested in the school system’s capital needs over the years – something it is required to do by law.

“Since 2008 the county has spent $148 million in capital expenses improving the schools and will have funded the staffing of school resource officers in each school as of 2015,” he said.

Baldwin said there is another component to the Macon County Schools scenario and that’s geography which is an important factor in school funding since geographical barriers play a significant role in inflating the district’s per-pupil funding.

“No other district in the state has Wayah Mountain and the Cullasaja Gorge separating two communities from the county seat,” he said. “Nantahala and Highlands are two excellent schools and are very important to their communities and to Macon County. But, in other counties, without the geographical barriers, these two small K-12 schools would be quickly consolidated into the larger schools. This would result in a considerable savings of state and local funds. These geographical barriers are a stark reality in Macon County, and the state does not recognize this challenge in any meaningful way in terms of funding.”

nomination could be created – 25 to 30 pages with photographs and textual history designating it as a historic site. The primary hurdle would be proving that Highlands’ power plant was unique among power plants in North Carolina, which would involve comparisons and contrasts with others in the state.

“It took 13 years to get the Highlands Northern District on the National Register, but it involved many homes, rather than a single site. But agency delays and hoops could extend the power plant nomination to more than one year. And, Advanced Hydropower’s application might take precedence, since it was filed first,” he said.

According to Annie Laurie McDonald, Preservation Specialist with the State Historic Preservation Office in Asheville, which is part of the NC Department of Cultural Resources, both the Lake Sequoyah Dam and the hydroelectric plant on the Cullasaja River have been in the National Registry’s sights.

“In 1989 both the dam and the powerplant were put on the National Register study list which is the first step in getting listed on the National Register,” she said. “In 1990, it was determined that both structures were potentially – not formally – but potentially eligible for National Register status.”

“Back in the 1920s, the dam and the powerplant represented very advanced technology for the time. It speaks to the foresight of Highlands’ forefathers who knew if they could offer water and light people would come and it’s why Highlands had an electric utility so early on,” said Taylor.

Sam Green, a retired electrical engineer was impressed with the plant as a whole.

“The building proper was built with solid cut granite blocks, each weighing several hundred pounds – the building proper will be there a thousand years from now,” he said. “The roof of course was wooden, and needs to be replaced, as does all the glass in the window panes but this is a very historic building. The Westinghouse Generator that furnished the Town of Highlands with electricity from 1927 to 1968 – for over 40 years – is still sitting there in place!”

The Gospel; its essence and history

By Sam Forrester
Whiteway Presbyterian Church

Asking what the essence of the gospel may seem to be is a silly question. Most everyone would immediately say its essence is salvation but that is not what its basic nature is. Matthew 4:23 gives the basic nature of the gospel.

“Jesus went throughout Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, preaching the good news of the kingdom, and healing every disease and sickness among the people.” The essence, that is, the basic nature of the gospel, is the goodness of the kingdom, which does contain salvation. You could also say it the way Luke does in Acts 20:24 “However, I consider my life worth nothing to me, if only I may finish the race and complete the task the Lord Jesus has given me— the task of testifying to the gospel of God’s grace.” The gospel is an invitation into the kingdom of God. It only begins to show the wonders planned for you by God’s grace. The basic nature, then, of the gospel, is God’s goodness to you in preparing your salvation and a way and place you can enjoy that salvation.

Matthew 4:23 shows that Christ was a busy man going through the land preaching the gospel of the kingdom. This is the gospel of heaven. It is the grace and glory of God. It is the kingdom that came to earth with him to be the believer’s home. The gospel is the charter of this kingdom. It contains the oath used by the king at his coronation. In that oath, he promises to all who will hear and believe on him as the King of kings and Lord of lords salvation, entrance into this great kingdom. Membership in this kingdom is the essence of the gospel. It is because of this kingdom connection that the unsaved cannot comprehend the gospel.

II Corinthians 4:3: “And even if our gospel is veiled, it is veiled to those who are perishing.”

Those who have no invitation to join the kingdom cannot understand this glorious kingdom that is coming. This is why some fail to stay on course with the teaching of Scripture, because they see salvation not as a guide into the glory of heaven but as a free pass with no need for diligence. They fail to understand salvation is a process that brings one to the gates of heaven with the purpose of them becoming a part of this great kingdom. Salvation without the kingdom would be worthless.

I run across people every now and then who seem to think the gospel was new with Jesus. They see it as something God had only begun to show the wonders planned for you by God’s grace. The basic nature, then, of the gospel, is God’s goodness to you in preparing your salvation and a way and place you can enjoy that salvation.

Hebrews 2:14 talks about Satan’s wound. “Since the children have flesh and blood, he too shared in their humanity so that by being made like the one he made...”

his death he might destroy him who holds the power of death—that is, the devil...” Jesus through his resurrection brings the world of Satan to an end and on that last great day, he will cast Satan into the pit of fire where he can never again harm men. This shows that the gospel was in the heart of God for all eternity and was part of his plan from before the beginning of time. Ephesians 1:4 says, “For he chose us in him before the creation of the world to be holy and blameless in his sight.”

The prophet when shown what was to come in this world declares. “Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob. He will teach us his ways, so that we may walk in his paths. The law will go out from Zion, the word of the Lord from Jerusalem” (Isaiah 2:3). This is a look at the gospel coming into the world through Jesus.

He also says in Isaiah 29:18: “In that day the deaf will hear the words of the scroll, and out of gloom and darkness the eyes of the blind will see.” This is a clear reference to the coming gospel as Paul shows in II Corinthians 4:4 “The god of this age has blinded the minds of unbelievers, so that they cannot see the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God.”

The gospel is the answer to this blindness and this has been declared from the very beginning.

It was prophesied that a Messiah would come and deliver his people from the power of sin, Satan and death. Listen to the words Jesus opened his ministry with from Isaiah 61:1, “The Spirit of the Sovereign Lord is on me, because the Lord has anointed me to preach good news to the poor. He has sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim freedom for the captives and release for the prisoners.” This gospel of God’s grace is the foundation of the Bible, Old Testament and New Testament. There is no separation in God’s plan. He foreordained all that has happened and everything had a purpose to prepare men and the world for the coming of Jesus Christ and this wonderful redemption he brought. The essence of this gospel is to bring a people unto God so they might live with him forever. The only way into this goodness of the kingdom of Heaven is through faith in Jesus Christ.

I have been asked many times why I became a real estate broker and am willing to work so hard. I rarely have time to sit and ponder this but will share my thoughts with you in regards to what it really takes to be successful in this highly competitive business.

Few jobs are as time intensive as the job of being a real estate broker. It’s somewhat like being an executive in an office, a luxury salesperson, a delivery driver and a psychologist all in one. I (and my wonderful brokers) have to handle all the tasks of running a business (phone calls, meetings, etc) while also learning everything we can about neighborhoods, HOAs, club memberships and dues, zoning restrictions, etc. We also have to be on call and ready to show properties at any given time of day or evening if that’s the only time a buyer is available. Being in a tourist town gives us a very small window of opportunity indeed. The weather adds another variable in itself. Sometimes trips by buyers get cancelled after brokers have arranged access to sellers’ homes. Home inspections are cancelled due to snow and icy roads (this happened last week) so MANY phone calls are made and rescheduling is necessary.

Market trends, home features, neighborhood features, buyer preferences – there are hundreds of things of which I must keep track. I either need a fantastic memory or a detailed note system. I have been known to pull the car over and write on the back of a grocery receipt many times when I have received calls!

I’m frequently asked to do a CMA – comparative market analysis – for sellers who never call back and will list with someone else who gives them an unrealistic sales price. Each morning I start my day researching our MLS system to see what is new on the market, what has sold, what is pending and what is in due diligence. This allows me to guide buyers and sellers with up to date, accurate and reasonable market values.

I network with colleagues to learn what is coming on the market and to make them aware of my listings and any changes that are forthcoming. I create flyers and email blasts to do the same. Flyers are time consuming to say the least. I schedule professional type photos – an iphone just doesn’t do justice to a home! I write a detailed description for each of my listings that verbally creates a vision that invites you to come and see the house.

I have “dreaded” deadlines for ads in both newspapers, WHLC radio, the Buyer’s Guide, The Laurel, and other magazines. I also advertise on the online version of the Highlander newspaper. Our website must be consistently updated and hundreds of other websites must be checked for accuracy. The list goes on and on!

My weekends are rarely free since weekends are when most buyers come to town. Also, sellers who live out of state usually schedule listing appointments on Saturdays or Sundays. I work many holidays since potential buyers are in town then.

With all this said – I LOVE my job. I meet so many nice people and the fact that they allow me to help with such an important decision in their lives is very rewarding. I make lifelong friendships with clients – we often share meals, struggles, joys and goals with each other. People are fascinating to me and the fact that I can help those with serious health problems sell their home quickly or help prevent a foreclosure by dealing with banks for 4 years (yes, this has happened!) is my motivation to continue. The best closing is a “win-win” for both buyers and sellers and that is what I strive to achieve.

So I have concluded that the real estate industry in Highlands and Cashiers is as much a part of the hospitality industry as it is a sales profession. Success at the job requires a hospitality attitude, self-discipline, flexibility as well as a bit of tenacity. If those characteristics come naturally to you, then you are already ahead and could potentially rise to the top.
