Macon County Commission candidates line up

With just under two weeks until North Carolina's March 15 primary election, Macon County Commissioner candidates posted up at the League of Women Voters Candidate Forum last week to define their positions on pertinent issues facing the community. Three Republican candidates for District 3 and two Republican candidates for District 2 were on hand.

In District 3, Emmanuel “Manny” Carrion, Greg Boyer, and incumbent commissioner Paul Higdon are each vying for the open seat with the winner heading to the November election to run against Democrat Robert “Bobby” Kuppers.

Commissioner Paul Higdon thanked voters for attending the forum and said he wanted to seek re-election for the same reason he ran for office in the first place. “What we’re charged with is to levy taxes, collect taxes and fund services,” said Higdon. “That’s the

Native Highlander part of team to map JC landslides

The recent heavy rains and accompanying landslides are a harsh reminder that landslides are a part of living in mountainous Western North Carolina and most currently Jackson County.

Jackson County has teamed with a local landslide mapping consulting firm to learn more about the landslides that affect the county and what areas may be more prone to landslides in the future. This project will provide information to the citizens of Jackson County so they will be more aware of the hazards and can be proactive in preventing or avoiding them.

Questions about Satulah Summit access linger

One spoke of the Highlands Improvement Society's mission was to preserve the natural beauty of Highlands. Under the leadership of Marguerite Ravenel. In 1909 it bought the summit of Satulah Mountain which her father, Capt. Prioleau Ravenel, Sr., had made accessible in 1890 by building a road to the top. The 32-acre park was dedicated to public use in perpetuity. The society built a stone shelter house at the top for those who wanted to spend the night on the summit “for the purpose of beholding the beauties of the sunset, of the starlit heavens and the glories of the sunrise.” Only parts of the stone walls and chimney remain today. However today, due to strict access restrictions, visitors to the Satulah Mountain Summit must park on S. 4th Street and walk up the mountain a mile before accessing the Summit trail. This deters many from experiencing the Satulah Mountain Summit and its vistas of three states. See Mayor Pat Taylor’s column on page 2.

Highlands gym roof on BOE wish list for ‘16–17

Each year, the Macon County Board of Education asks the school administration for capital outlay requests for the district’s 11 different school sites. The principals compile a list of needs at their schools, ranging from roof leaks to parking lot potholes. Principals then narrow down their list based on priority and submit that request to the Board of Education. Superintendent Dr. Chris Baldwin, along with school system leaders, then whittle capital outlay needs further before finalizing a list to send to the Macon County Board of Commissioners for consideration.

The total capital outlay list started at $9,389,389.20 and was broken down into three categories, Renovation/Construction, Furniture, Machines and Equipment, and vehicles. Each category,
What to do about access to the summit?

Prior to being elected mayor, I was aware of the Satulah Mountain issue related to the access of the Highlands/Cashiers Land Trust property on the summit. Back then, I met with a number of stakeholders, and believed an equitable solution allowing folks to drive and park on the Land Trust Property was possible. Now, after being in office for two years, I am not so sure.

Recent public statements underscore differing points of view. What is surprising to me is that apparently, even within the Land Trust membership, there are different visions on accessibility and how their Satulah property should be managed.

In addition, there are residents and property owners on the road leading up to the Land Trust property, and their views have to be considered. Some of the residents have concerns about having a public parking area in their neighborhood. I understand their position, since I have seen graffiti sprayed on the town's Satulah water tank and beer cans thrown all around the area.

On the other hand, there are other community stakeholders, like hikers, who want access by vehicle up to the summit. They point out that the old and very young are unable to make the long hike from town that is now required to get to the top of Satulah. They believe that a few parking spots would guarantee access for everyone. Parking advocates stress that the summit has been fully open to the public for 100 years. They contend there has always been a tradition of vehicular access to this iconic and historic site, whether it was once by wagon or now by automobile.

The complexity of this issue has intensified over recent years with the residential development on Satulah Mountain. Complex legal issues are on the table including ambiguous deed language and ownership. There are also homeowner property rights at stake. All sides have valid points and look for the town to embrace their position.

For instance, some stakeholders have urged me, the mayor, to lead the town in assuring full public access through initiating an eminent domain action. In other words, the town should take over the current private road that starts at the Worley property, and make it a public road. Under this proposal, limited public parking could be created between the town water tank property and the adjacent Land Trust parcel. Other folks in the Land Trust might object to this plan, as well as a number of Satulah Mountain residents. Such an initiative could trigger years of legal actions in the courts. In the end, the town's eminent domain action might not be upheld.

I, along with other town officials, have concerns with using eminent domain to portray me as a greedy cheat, which would be an untrue characterization.

MCACA was thrilled with the opportunity to sponsor these shows. After they lost their use of the Catholic Church yard, where they showed monthly for a number of years, they needed an avenue to show in Highlands. Our arrangement allowed me to do all the work of organizing, advertising, etc. while they just had to show up and set up. They were quite satisfied, and it helped them fulfill their mission of promoting and fostering interest in the arts in Macon County.

Some people may not know that I started the Village Square shows in 2006, but now they are in their 10th year. The shows have been a tradition of vehicular access to this iconic and historic site, whether it was once by wagon or now by automobile.

He was a Professor of Anatomy at Yale University (New Haven, CT), the University of Arkansas (Little Rock) and the University of Florida (Gainesville) where he also served as Dean of Health Related Professions. Dr. Suzuki created an endowed scholarship at UALR to provide financial assistance to 2nd year medical students demonstrating the highest level of understanding of the importance between integrating science and clinical medicine with professional values and ethics in the art of compassionate, individualized, hands-on patient care. operating them independently at the old post office and the Village Square until the town constructed the new park and required a non-profit sponsor in 2013. This requirement did not stipulate that the majority of revenue had to go to the non-profit, as the reporting implies.

These shows benefit many people, from scores of artisans in Highlands and the area, to the many customers who attend the shows to find that special hand-made something(s), and to local businesses who profit from the influx of visitors, locals, and vendors alike staying at inns, shopping and dining in town. I always give at least one non-profit group a free booth as well, and there have been many.

These events require an enormous amount of work to do well, and I deserve to be fairly compensated for my time and expenses. We are all very proud of the show’s high quality, its success, and the professional way it is run. It is truly home grown.

Aside from the park, suitable in-town venues are virtually non-existent. However, thanks to the generosity of Al Bolt we will continue to organize the Village Square Shows at Highlands Plaza (behind the Chinese restaurant). MCAA will continue to sponsor the show, as it would be a big loss for them to lose it.

Yes, I am saddened that the town made the decision to not allow our shows in the beautiful new park. But I am grateful to Planning Director Randy Feierabend and Highlands Fire & Rescue Asst. Chief Robbie Forrester for their valuable time and assistance with the new venue.

role the state and federal government also have. We definitely need to have a set budget each year and take just enough money from the taxpayers to adequately fund that budget.”

Higdon is a Macon County native who attended the University of Arkansas at Little Rock after graduating from Franklin High School. In addition to currently serving as a commissioner, Higdon has served on the Macon County Board of Health.

Greg Boyer, a lawyer, said that although he doesn’t have any prior political experience, he wanted to run for county commissioner to see a change in Macon County.

“I sat down one day and I looked at what our county was facing and I was concerned,” said Boyer. “I could have gone anywhere in the world and worked with my job,” he said. “I came to Macon County, I came home. So, I'm invested in this community, and I will make every decision for the betterment of our people.”

Boyer graduated from Montreat College, Florida State University, and O.W. Coburn School of Law in Tulsa, OK. Boyer and his wife moved to Macon County after spending their honeymoon in a cabin in Cowee.

As a father of four, Emmanuel “Manny” Carrion said he wants to help shape Macon County into something future generations can be proud of.

“I’m 36 years old, I have four kids,” said Carrion. “The chances of those kids going to school here, going to high school, going to college and coming back to Macon County are not too good right now. I’m running for commissioner to give my kids a chance to stay in Macon County, to give my grandkids a chance to stay in Macon County. If there’s something I can do now, while those kids are young to give them a chance to stay in Macon County, that’s the main reason I’m running for commissioner.”

Carrion started his business Carrion Tree Service in 2007 and is also an investor in the Bowery Restaurant. Between the two business ventures, Carrion helps to employ upwards of 40 people in Macon County.

With the District 2 commission seat left open when incumbent Kevin Corbin announced his bid for the North Carolina House of Representatives District 120, Republicans Karl Gillespie and Ron Haven both signed on. The winner in March will appear on the November ballot against Democrat Charlie Leatherman.

Gillespie touted his routes as a business owner and as a native of Macon County for his reason for running for the commission.

“Two and a half years ago, I met Karl while he was broadcasting for a radio station. I’m so proud of him for coming back to his community to be a part of it,” said Haven.

Haven, who has previously served on the board of commissioners said that he wants to work to repair the county’s economic state.

“There’s three places in America that’s the worst places to do business, the middle of the desert, New York City, and Macon County, North Carolina,” said Haven. “I believe in having everything that our county can afford to have, and I want to capitalize the word afford. I’m not going to go out and be looking to raise taxes on you, just because we think there’s five people there that should have it. I feel like, if we all work together, we could have a fine county, but what we’re going to have to do is live within our means.”

Haven graduated from Franklin High School in 1975 and first served as commissioner from 2010-14.

then had subcategories that identified requests from respective school sites. The school administration’s initial capital outlay request identified $8,154,173 in renovation and construction needs, but after the prioritizing process, the school board narrowed down the needs to $363,365, the bulk of which was requested for roof repairs at the Highlands gym.

With the recent renovation completed at Highlands School, there weren’t a lot of construction and structural needs identified by school staff. In addition to the $209,105 requested for the gym roof, initially Principal Brian Jetter requested $30,000 for stage lighting, but that request was left off after prioritization throughout the district.

In terms of furniture, machines, and equipment, the district’s capital outlay request includes $518,060 in technology replacement plans district-wide. The bulk of that weighs in at $232,882 for a five-year replacement of desktops in the district. Next, the technology plan calls for $135,200 for a five-year replacement plan for iPads in the district to continue implanting a 1:1 program for students. The remaining portion of the half a million requested for technology includes $43,000 for SAN replacement district-wide, $44,750 for a five-year replacement for laptops, $11,000 for a five-year replacement of MAC computers in the district and $51,228 for a seven-year replacement plan for projectors.

While Highlands School was part of a three-school request for new vacuums for $3,750, as well as a 20’ floor scrubber costing $3,067, neither item made the final cut.

The district’s vehicle request include $28,000 for a box truck and $88,000 for an activity lift bus.

In all, the school system’s original capital outlay need list was reduced from $9.3 million to $1,168,850. The board voted to submit the request to county commissioners to be considered as part of the county’s budget planning process.

In the past two years, the Macon County Board of Commissioners voted to increase the school system’s capital outlay budget and during the county’s first budget meeting, the board shared the consensus to once again increase it in the coming year. Last year, commissioners allocated $300,000 for capital outlay needs in the school system.

solve this issue. The problem is that the Satulah summit is not a town park or recreation site. The town does not own the summit. That legal fact would make it difficult for the town to take over the road in order to provide public access to a property not even owned by the town. It might be a different situation if the land had been given to the town decades ago for the purpose of providing a park for the public. But, that is not the case now, the summit is owned by the Land Trust, and the road leading to the property is clearly a private road.

So, should the town simply resolve this impasse by invoking eminent domain? I believe the town has the right to apply eminent domain only in cases where there is a vital public interest. In my opinion, this situation does not rise to that level. If the town was being told they could not access their water tank and communication equipment on Satulah, or provide town services to residents because of the private road, that would be an entirely different issue. But that isn’t the case, and I don’t see how the town can force folks to give up their property so others can park in their neighborhood.

I hope a solution can be found that everyone can support, but don’t expect the Town of Highlands to impose a settlement. I have been told by some that my position is short sighted and will be a detriment to the community in the long-term. Maybe so, but at times a municipality is caught between the positions of conflicting groups. While it may not be fast and efficient, all parties are entitled to due process. The town should not expedite the process with a questionable eminent domain action.

I hope civil discourse will continue to be the guiding principle for all parties as this issue is addressed.

Lucien Harris exhibit opens at The Bascom

Lucien Harris was a painter of natural subjects and an enthusiastic admirer of the beauty in Highlands. He moved to the area in 1980 to gain continuous inspiration for his work.

As an advocate for encouraging the arts within local communities, he became a founding member of The Art League of Highlands in 1980. Through his various roles as a teacher and supporter of the League, he was instrumental in the early development of The Bascom Louise Gallery at The Hudson Library.

With the Art League of Highlands, The Bascom is honored to showcase the extraordinary talent of Lucien Harris. “We are fortunate to have this work in our collection and even more so to have borrowed additional paintings from the Harris family and local collectors who knew him and admired his work,” said Sallie Taylor, Chief Exhibitions Officer of The Bascom.

The work of Lucien Harris will be on exhibition from March 5 to May 22, 2016 in The Bascom’s Joel Gallery with free admission. The public is invited to attend an exhibition reception for Lucien Harris Saturday, April 30, 5 to 7 pm. For more information, please contact The Bascom at 828.526.4949 or visit www.thebascom.org.
STATUES ARE REMINDERS OF THE PERSON WHO LIVED A SACRED LIFE

By Rev. Dr. Francis Xavier Arockiasamy
OLM Catholic Church

There is a false opinion among some people regarding the use of statues in churches. Usually we see a lot of statues in the Catholic Churches. I would like to share a Catholic view on statues.

The statues are used in the churches to recall the person or thing depicted. It just helps us to remember them in our memory. Catholics decorate statues with a lot of flowers to honor their memory.

From the book of Genesis of the Old Testament of the Bible, we have a passage 1:27, which says, “God created man in his image; in the divine image he created him; male and female he created them.” An image could be understood as an inanimate thing, like a painted or carved figure. Or a living thing. In the book of Genesis, we are told that God created humankind in the divine image. It is our understanding that the image is reflected in the human's capacity to plan, to desire, to achieve, to respond personally to each other and to God. These qualities are found in the living God described in the Old Testament of the Holy Bible.

In the New Testament, from the letter of St. Paul to the Colossians, St. Paul uses the idea of image extensively. i.e. “Christ is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of all creation.” (Col 1:15). In his theology, St. Paul says that God, who could not be imaged in the Old Testament, has given us a human image of the divine being in Jesus Christ. The real meaning is that the human face of Jesus Christ has become the visible image of the God who could not be imaged in the Old Testament. It is God who has given us a visible image—the face of Christ.

It is the understanding in the history of the Catholic Church that has given us a visible image; therefore we can imitate this divine action in our representations of Christ. St. Paul explains in his second letter to the Corinthians. i.e. 2Cor:3:14-17. He says, “Now the Lord is the Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom. All of us, gazing with unveiled face on the glory of the Lord, are being transformed into the same image from glory to glory, as from the Lord who is the Spirit.” He explains that the image of Christ removes the veil that may remain over the hearts of those who read the Old Testament.

So Dear Brothers and Sisters, it is the understanding of the Catholic Church regarding the images found in art of angels, Mary and the saints who are not Gods, but creatures of God. They help us to understand what God has done for us. The sacred images were part of the culture and worship of the first Christians in history and tradition. Catholics look to saints because they are such wonderful humans who are mirrors of Christ. They were given to us to imitate. To be clear, in the biblical sense, the images of Christ and the saints are not idols. There are spiritual and physical realities in the glorified bodies of Christ and his beloved which the images represent. It is also understood that if the images are lost or destroyed, the spiritual reality remains. If you destroy an idol nothing remains. So the images or statues which are used in the Catholic Church are just reminders of the person who lived a sacred life and is recognized by the Church today as a saint and a holy person.

As much has changed since we last explored this subject, I’d like to present new information and opinions. Before approaching a REALTOR to view properties, aspiring real estate buyers often conduct online research. Even before attending their first showing, prospective buyers have the ability to take virtual tours, click through photographs, and get a notion of the market value of the properties that interest them. Real estate websites are valuable tools for consumer research; however, not all information is created equal.

Two of the most influential online resources for potential real estate buyers include Realtor.com and Zillow Group (includes Trulia.com and Zillow.com).

When conducting online real estate research on these sites, consider the following:

• Can you determine how the website obtained their information?
• Does this site have the credentials and qualifications to be an authority on the subject?
• Is there a sponsor or advertiser on the page? Could that sponsorship influence the credibility of the information?
• Is the information current?

So, how do these internet favorites rate on the quality and credibility tests?

Realtor.com
Fact: Longest Running website, publicly traded
Strength: Realtor.com, Move Inc.’s leading product, has achieved a reputation of accuracy owed to its collaboration with the National Association of Realtors. This partnership permits Realtor.com to collect information directly from over 900 multiple listing services across the country. The information on Realtor.com is coming directly from the REALTORS that are listing the properties. By associating with a credible organization such as The National Association of Realtors, there is more certainty that the information is factual, current, and reliable. Realtor.com places accuracy as a priority above all else. On Realtor.com, the listings are updated regularly to include the most recent listings and only properties that are currently on the market.

Weakness: Previously thought to be less user friendly than its counterparts, consumers complained in the past that Realtor.com is complicated to use and that the advertising on the sidebar creates confusion when trying to decipher whom to contact for further information on an individual listing. That being said, Realtor.com made an effort to position their branding in a way that better reflected their purpose. They revised their logo and launched a new site.

Verdict: In consideration of their commitment to accuracy, current data, affiliation with the National Association of Realtors, and the improvements made to allow for a more user friendly website, Realtor.com is an excellent go-to source for real estate research. They rate high on quality and credibility.

Zillow Group
History: Via a $2.5 billion acquisition on February 17, 2015, Zillow, Inc. and Trulia, Inc. now operate as wholly owned subsidiaries of Zillow Group, Inc., which is landslide. It was the first county mapped by the NCGS after it got funding for the mapping. Jackson County was in the process of being mapped by the NCGS when the state landslide mapping program lost its funding.

Jackson County has contracted Appalachian Landslide Consultants, PLLC (ALC) – owned by native Highlander Jennifer Bryson Bauer and Stephen Fuemmeler – to map landslides and landslide prone areas throughout the county. Bauer and Fuemmeler are licensed geologists and will begin their field work this month.

Both were on the NCGS mapping team that mapped Macon County. When funding was cut, they started ALC and have been offering mapping services as a private firm.

“We’ve mapped a portion of Haywood County with funds from non-profit organizations. Jackson County is the first government entity to contract the mapping since the NCGS program was eliminated,” said Bauer.

“It is encouraging to see Jackson County step up and tackle this problem on their own. We hope other counties that don’t have landslide maps will follow their lead to get this important information to the people who live here in the mountains of Western NC,” says Stephen Fuemmeler. Jennifer Bauer adds, “The maps are a tool to help citizens become more aware of landslides in the county and to make informed decisions when developing. When used properly, the maps will help people save money, save time, and maybe even save their lives.”

ALC will be driving many of the roads in the county looking for areas affected by landslides, both in the ancient past and from recent rains. They will be talking to landowners about any landslides they know about and asking permission to access property when needed. When they find landslides, they will collect data on the types of rocks, soil, and other slope characteristics that contributed to the landslide. This information will be used to help locate other areas that might be more prone to landslides in future heavy rain events.

ALC will also be assisting the Jackson County Emergency Management office with any landslide emergencies or safety concerns they have. Additionally, ALC will notify Jackson County EMS if they find any slope stability issues that they feel could pose an immediate threat to life or property.

Public outreach and education is also an important component of this project. ALC has produced a brochure with information about the project, the mapping products, and landslides in Jackson County, which they will hand out to landowners they meet. They will also be creating a User’s Guide for the landslide inventory and susceptibility maps they produce. After the maps have been finalized, ALC will lead a workshop for interested users to learn how to use the online landslide map viewer.

The county is helping coordinate project stakeholders meetings with invited members who represent different sectors, regions, and organizations within Jackson County. The first of these meetings was held in January of this year. There are other community meetings throughout the project to follow in the coming year. The final stakeholders and community meetings will be held in the spring of 2017.

ALC anticipates field work lasting until the end of this year, and then computer modeling lasting through spring of 2017. The project will be completed by June 30, 2017. Visit www.appalachianlandslide.com to learn more about landslides and landslide mapping.

comprised of four real estate brands: Zillow, Trulia, StreetEasy, and HotPads. The union of Zillow and Trulia is a nuptial between previous rivals. Together they form an online real estate force—complete with 2,000 employees. Zillow Group is publicly traded on the NASDAQ.

Strength: Zillow is well-liked by consumers because of its attractive and easy to use format. Both the property information and the mortgage calculators are popular. The search feature includes a variety of filters to narrow your search. The map displays red dots for all the properties listed in an area. Zillow features active listings of properties for sale as well as information on houses that are not currently on the market.

Weakness: A Zestimate is Zillow’s automated property value estimate. According to Fortune, “Zillow has Zestimated the value of 57% of U.S. housing stock, but only 65% of that could be considered accurate.” Zestimates are consistently quoted to REALTORS as measures of market value and that could incant a major annoyance for the buyer, seller, and REALTOR, an annoyance that could be quite costly. Drastic Zestimate gaps are difficult to maneuver. For instance, if a house has a Zestimate of $350,000 but the home is listed at $450,000, a potential buyer will most likely cringe at the asking price and challenge its validity. Alternately, a seller might demand to know from their REALTOR why the suggested listing price is at $595,000 if Zillow estimates that their property is worth $685,000. The Washington Post states that nationwide Zillow has a “median error rate of about 8%.” However, they go on to show specific areas with error rates as high as 42%.

Verdict: Due to the user friendliness of Zillow Group’s websites, Zillow is a nice point of departure down the path of real estate research. Just to get an idea of what is available on the market. Think of it as your online “Real Estate Wish Book”. What about the Zestimates? The best bet is to delegate serious pricing discussions to the established experts on real estate values—experienced local REALTORS.

When you are ready to take the leap from the screen to the screen porch, make an appointment to discuss your real estate needs with an experienced local REALTOR. They will gladly guide your through the entire real estate purchase process.
