USFS is considering stabilizing Bridal Veil Falls

This past September, the USFS requested a geological evaluation and assessment for rock fall hazards at Bridal Veil Falls, a popular tourist attraction on US 64 west just outside of town.

What’s fun about Bridal Veil is that motorists can veer off US 64 west to drive under the falls for a natural car wash and reemerge along their way. Originally, US 64 was aligned with the roadway under the falls but due to frequent icy conditions, the road was rerouted from behind the waterfall to its current position.

Due to rock falls that have occurred since 2003, the USFS hired Altamont Environmental, Inc. to do a risk assessment due to its popularity and the visiting public.

In 2003, 2013 and this past summer, there were significant events in the area … the most notable in 2003 when a large boulder overhang above the falls dislodged and fell off to block the thruway.

Part 3 of a series – Effect on education

President Donald Trump called for a $9 billion, or 13.5 percent funding cut to the United States Department of Education when he released his first budget proposal. Like the other cuts he has proposed, cuts to education are intended to increase military spending.

Although state and local governments pick up most of the “education” tab, the Federal government accounts for some of overall spending in terms of education, but federal dollars are often geared

Highlands Hurricanes extend winning streak

On March 25 the Highlands Hurricanes Swim Team traveled to Murphy to swim against Cherokee County Aquatics Club (CCAC), Jackson County Swim Team (JCST), and the North Georgia Rapids (NGR). In a close meet the Hurricanes once again triumphed. The scores were HHST 393; NGR 378; CCAC 210; and JCST 77.

Overall 24 Hurricanes traveled to Murphy, all of whom scored at the meet, and brought home 115 ribbons (22 of them 1st place blue ones), set 62 personal records and 15 team records.

The Hurricanes were led by Chase Kenter, Jack Sumner, Calvin McQuitty and first time swimmer Layla Babac. Kenter, Sumner, and Babac won all 5 of their races scoring 35 points each. McQuitty won four races, and had 2 Junior Olympiic qualifying times, even with getting touched out in the mile swim for 2nd place, still scoring 34

Easter is a big deal in Highlands! On Good Friday at noon, the community gathers at the Catholic Church on 5th Street to begin the Stations of the Cross walk through town where the group stops at each church along the way. On Saturday at 11a, families gather at the Rec Park on N. 4th Street for the annual Easter egg dash for kids ages 0-9. On Easter Sunday, April 16, prior to the myriad of activities at each church in town (see ads throughout the paper), there is the Ecumenical Sunrise Service at K-H Founders Park on Pine Street at 6:45a. If it rains it will be in the Episcopal church sanctuary on 5th Street.
Highlands is leaving winter and moving quickly toward spring. There is also movement on several town issues, so here is an update on several items.

By the time this article comes out, the town will have entered an agreement with Duke Energy on how we will collect their coal ash recovery fees for them. The board recently voted to resolve this issue by abiding by the decision of the North Carolina Utility Commission on how much Duke can assess customers for coal ash remediation.

We are waiting for the Utilities Commission to make a final ruling after hearing from all parties. The Commission could grant Duke the five billion dollars that was originally requested for the cleanup. Or, they could grant Duke the five billion dollars that was from all parties. The Commission could enter an agreement with Duke on how the decision of the North Carolina Utility Commission on how much Duke can assess customers for coal ash remediation.

The downtown parking ordinances will soon be going back into effect. I have been receiving feedback from several sources that it may be time to revisit the time in which the parking restrictions are in effect. Several people have noted that we now have full parking downtown even at times during the winter months. Should there be consideration given to making the parking restrictions year round instead of just from May to the end of December? We will see.

At the next board meeting on Thursday, April 20, representatives from the US Postal Service will be present to discuss the issue of downtown mail delivery. Folks interested in this issue should attend the meeting. This first agenda item is not a session about general mail service, but rather a presentation and discussion about the pros and cons, or possible procedures for implementing downtown mail delivery.

Finally, the immigration issue continues to be discussed in Highlands, as well as in communities all across the state and nation. I will continue to work closely with the police chief in monitoring this situation. We will inform the community of any changes that we see coming. As for now, there are no procedural changes impacting Highlands. I may be wrong, but I anticipate none.

Milestone

Egler running 17th Boston Marathon for cancer research

Brian Egler of Highlands will be running his 17th Boston Marathon for Cancer Research on April 17. He said last year the Highlands community helped him raise $8,580—the best year so far—toward the Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge grand total of over $5.6 million.

This year he hopes to raise over $8,500 once again!

One hundred percent of this sum will support the Claudia Adams Barr Program in Innovative Basic Cancer Research at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute in Boston.

Running 26.2 miles is hard. Training for the marathon during the winter months is hard (especially in the mountains of North Carolina). But none of this compares with the fight that those with cancer endure each and every day.

“I’m so grateful for your continued support, and I hope you will be able help again,” he said.

Checks can be made payable to the “Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge” and sent to: Brian Egler, PO Box 2743, Highlands, NC 28741 toward much needed programs and functions in the public education system.

The cost of the United States’ entire Education Department for 2017 came in at $69.4 billion with $3,074,581 of that coming to Macon County Schools.

Not only would the proposed budget cuts impact Macon County Schools, President Trump’s budget also earmarks a significant amount of money to promote school choice, something President Trump campaigned on.

Currently, charter schools are funded at over $300 million annually. President Trump’s budget includes allocating an additional $168 million to increase opportunities at existing charter schools, while increasing the number of charter schools around the country.

This school year, Macon County has 52 students from the county who are currently attending Summit Charter School. There are two students attending the Learning Center in Cherokee County, two students at NC Virtual Academy, and five students enrolled at North Carolina Connections Academy.

Macon County Schools 2017-’18 budget includes a local funding allocation of $85,000 to these charter schools and will also include a loss of state dollars of roughly $5,600 per child.

The budget also includes $250 million for an unspecified “new private school choice program,” which experts are calling a voucher system. President Trump’s budget proposal states that total school choice funding will eventually reach the level he mentioned in the campaign: $20 billion.

His budget proposal also includes a $1 billion increase to Title I funding, which provides funding for high poverty schools, but specifies that the money be earmarked to promote school choice.

Macon County Superintendent Dr. Chris Baldwin cautioned board members last week during a budget work session that the President’s proposed $2.25 billion cut to eliminate Title II Part A funds would mean a loss of two teaching positions locally.

Title II funds are federal dollars designated to better recruit, support and train educators, particularly for high-need schools.

In the past, Macon County has been able to utilize the funds locally to support two teaching positions, which he noted would have to be replaced locally, or from the county’s budget allocation to the school system.

Macon County Commission Vice Chair Ronnie Beale said that Title II funds are essential for districts such as Macon County, who often use the funds for continuing education and training opportunities for teachers. The program helps train qualified teachers that spend valuable time in the classroom.

After-school programs are also in danger in the proposed federal budget, which proposes curtailing $1.2 billion to the 21st century community learning centers program, which is dedicated to providing before- and after-school enrichment opportunities such as tutoring and other services.

The budget proposal either totally cuts or eliminates funding for around 20 departmental programs “that are not effective, that duplicate other efforts, or that do not serve national needs,” according to the proposal.

Also targeted to be cut under President Trump’s budget, are additional programs like GEAR UP, Gaining Early Awareness and Readiness for Undergraduate Programs. GEAR UP is designed to increase the number of low-income students who are prepared to enter and succeed in post-secondary education by providing states and local community-education partnerships six-to-seven year grants for support services to high-poverty, middle and high schools.

GEAR UP, along with TRIO, a federal outreach and student services program designed to identify and provide services for individuals from disadvantaged backgrounds, is set to see a $193 million cut.

Potential cuts on the federal level aren’t the only thing that has Macon County leaders worried.

Last Wednesday, Dr. Chris Baldwin presented the board with three different budget scenarios to address fedeeral uncertainties as well as questions regarding state funding.

The largest concern locally is with a classroom size mandate set to go into effect this fall. Next year, state law requires schools across North Carolina to reduce class sizes in kindergarten through third grade. Kindergarten classes, for example, would have to shrink from a maximum of 24 students to 19.

“I don’t think anyone would disagree that reducing class sizes is a good thing,” said Macon County Board of Education Chairman Jim Breedlove, “but requiring a reduction, without providing the necessary funds to do so isn’t a good thing.”

According to Dr. Baldwin, if the law goes into effect next August, Macon County will need funding for six teachers to meet the mandate. That doesn’t include funds for the classroom those six teachers would need.

North Carolina House Bill 13 would ease the burden and offer districts like Macon County a solution. HB 13, which was co-sponsored by Representative Kevin Corbin would provide local districts with some flexibility on classroom caps. Even though the bill passed the House 100%, the Senate won’t even take up the issue.

The House and school districts across the state are urging a change in the law, Senate leaders refuse and the bill will likely never even be discussed, according to Senator Jim Davis. Davis said the issue the Senate has is that funds have been provided to districts in the past to lower classroom sizes, but the Senate doesn’t see any evidence of that and doesn’t think the funds have been used appropriately.

Macon County Schools Superintendent Dr. Baldwin disagrees and believes the funds were used as allowed by the law. School districts have traditionally had some flexibility to make their average class size slightly larger than the size state officials use to calculate how many teachers to fund for each district. Local school officials have used that flexibility to create and pay for teaching positions in non-core areas such as art, music, and PE.

In Macon County, that funding and flexibility has directly been used to provide seven art, PE, and music positions. If the current law isn’t changed, those positions and programs are first in line to be cut to make up the funding for the six positions that would be needed.

While Macon County is bracing for six positions because of the mandate, larger districts in the state such as Buncombe County, would potentially need to add 70 positions, and Wake County Schools is planning for a $26 million impact for teachers and a need for additional space.

Sen. Chad Barefoot, who not only represents Wake County, but who also co-chairs the Senate Education/Higher Education committee, says lowering class size is a priority, and districts who used previously allotted funds to fund art and PE teachers (although it was allowed) put those positions ahead of the need to lower class sizes.

The board of education voted to submit a budget proposal to the county that would request $7.3 million from Macon County for current expenses, and would then allocate $1.4 million from the school system’s fund balance to cover the cost of a 2 percent increase in utility costs, and funding for the six teaching positions and two federal positions that would be needed based on state and federal budget proposals.

Even though board members expressed concern about using fund balance resources to cover the cost of recurring expenses — when traditionally fund balance funds are only supposed to be used for nonrecurring costs — Dr. Baldwin recommended moving forward with the proposed budget anyway.

Twice last summer, Altamont field staff performed an evaluation of the site using harnesses, helmets and safety ropes attached to large trees located upstream of the waterfall. They inspected the quality of rock above the crest of the falls and hiked areas north, south and west of the falls. In addition, a 3D laser scan was performed to analyze the structures that were too high to reach.

The team ranked areas above, below and around the falls as low risk, moderate risk and high risk.

High risk locations were noted at the top of the cliff which means rock there could potentially impact US 64 below.

There are several low risk masses, close to the ground, that appear to be stable and have a low probability of impacting US 64.

In the end, Altamont has ranked three areas as high-risk for failure based on the geometry of discontinuities, evidence of past releases, potential for root or ice wedging and the height above ground.

Mitigation strategies would involve one or more of the following:

• Remove vegetation and maintain a 5-foot setback from the edge of the cliff. Vegetation removal is a preventive measure to reduce the risk of root wedging, which is a common cause of rock fall.
• Engineering slopes to a 1-to-1 gradient which will provide a stable soil profile in the north parking lot area.
• Scaling selectively to remove loose rocks and flakes that have high potential to fail.
• Installing passive rock bolts at select locations but drilling a hole through the rock mass past the plane of weakness and into competent rock; then grouting in place 1½ inch diameter rock bolts. The rock bolts can be installed flush to the surface and made to cosmetically resemble the surrounding rock. In some locations, a face plate may be required which would aesthetically impact the scenic overlook.

In addition, a geologist or a geotechnical engineer would have to periodically monitor the area to identify any additional movement or changes in the area.

September’s report is the first step in a process that will determine costs and timeframes associated with mitigation proceedings.

Altamont said the USFS must estimate the number of visitors to the falls and their behavior while visiting. While conducting their field work, Altamont saw many visitors stop each day to look at the falls, walk behind the falls, explore the cave feature behind the falls and climb down into the splash zone pit.

USFS Nantahala District Ranger Mike Wilkins said first on the hazard mitigation list is the parking lot. Bids have gone out to remove the 170 cubic yards of material that fell recently. During the summer or fall a renovation to the parking lot will be designed.

As far as mitigating the high-risk hazards noted by Altamont, Wilkins said funding will determine the avenues the USFS takes.

“We could do the rock bolts, which are very expensive, or we might just put up ballards to keep motorists from going under the falls, or some kind of aesthetic fencing.”

Fencing along the drip line of the falls up top is also an option.

“Bridal Veil Falls is a low-figure, long-term hazard but a fall could happen and it would be tragic,” he said.

Meanwhile, barricades will remain at the ingress and egress points under the falls, as well as signage telling people to stay out.

“Though rock falls are rare, the easy access next to US 64 and the promotion of the falls, including Dry Falls, increases the potential for several visitors being injured or killed if a massive rock fall or rockslide occurred,” stated Altamont in their report.

Mayor Pat Taylor said no one wants to see access to Bridal Veil Falls curtailed, but safety is key.

“Bridal Veil Falls is a signature venue for entering Highlands. The USFS is responsible for making their recreation sites as safe as possible for the public. This project has several complicated challenges that will take time to resolve, but it will improve access and safety to Bridal Veil,” he said.

Should You Make Your Home Smart?

While we may not yet have Rosie the robot from The Jetsons (though I can think of times she would be most useful!), we have certainly entered the age of the connected “smart home.” With so many smart home gadgets on the market, from doorbells that send you images of anyone who steps onto your porch to refrigerators that tell you when you are low on eggs, where do you start and will making your home “smart” pay off when it’s time to sell?

Understanding that everyone’s wants and needs are different, there are some areas where the trends seem to indicate that investing in these technologies, which aim to make our lives more comfortable and efficient, may give your home the upper hand when compared to a home that is not connected. These technologies may not raise the price of your home, but anytime you can bring in another “wow” factor, it really helps. This is especially true in a market such as ours where we still have a tremendous amount of home inventory and competition.

When prioritizing where to begin, concentrate on technologies that provide security, privacy, cost savings and energy savings. According to a recent survey conducted by the National Association of Realtors (NAR), people rate smart locks, lighting, thermostats and cameras as the most important when it comes to smart home devices. The ability to control your locks, change the temperature on your heating or cooling system and take a peek at the interior and exterior of your home when you are not there all from your smart phone are technologies that are available and affordable.

When it comes to lighting, smart technologies can truly transform a home. A professionally installed, well designed lighting system can add glamour, ambiance and space-magnifying qualities to any home. Lighting control can also be integrated with other elements of your home for ease of use. For example, pushing a “Goodnight” button...

I got a kick out of Charles Seabrook’s late March “Atlanta Journal-Constitution” column where he described the first day of spring as New Year’s Day for “wild creatures.” He imagined that the Carolina Wren singing outside his window March 20 was singing Happy New Year as it and other songbirds prepared for nesting season. Our family of Wrens started refurbishing last year’s nest just outside our screened porch in early March, perhaps because of the warmer temps. When the door to the porch is open, the cat is on the prowl and focused on their activity. It’s interesting to hear the different language the Wrens speak depending upon where Puddin’ is. When she’s on the porch watching them, they hiss. If not, they chirp.

I don’t always get to see some of the small birds that pass through, but this year I spied a pair of dark-eyed juncos with their distinctive gray cap and face and white lower breast. Another day, we looked out the kitchen window to see a red-shouldered hawk sitting on a big tree branch about six feet from the bluebird house, where a pair of bluebirds had settled in late February. He stayed there at least 20 minutes. Then later that day, there arose such a clatter; no, it wasn’t Santa and his reindeer. It was a huge flock of birds all milling around the treetops and squawking. We supposed the hawk was in the neighborhood again, and the flock was sounding the alarm.

You may have read that Georgia’s blueberry crop was damaged irreparably by the 20-degree temps we had the week of March 13th, and we didn’t escape unscathed here in Metro Atlanta. Our azaleas had started to bloom, and their tender buds were wilted by the frost as were the green shoots on our butterfly bush. The shrubs we planted all down the driveway last year have a brown cap of leaves now. Thankfully, our gardener tells me they will come back, and she’ll eventually trim off the unsightly dead leaves.

Another sign of our early spring was Banjo balking at going out for his walks. As he says, “This heat is too much for a little boy in a fuzzy suit.” He took to sleeping in our guest bathroom by mid-March, a sure sign he feels the heat.

On top of that, our boy is allergic to inhalants—translation, everything we humans are allergic to. He doesn’t seem to have sinus problems like we have; instead, he has skin problems. If we catch it in time, megadoses of prednisone will prevent him from breaking out in hot spots and then having to be shaved. Fingers crossed we manage to stay on top of them. I have been missing our compounding pharmacy, but miss it even more as I’m running out of the chewy dog treats they compounded for me from prednisone. Now, I’m back to trying to camouflage the pills to get the boy to eat them. We used peanut butter until we found out he’s allergic to that too!

And finally, there’s the screened porch. Though we haven’t yet done a major clean up, we’ve dusted it off several times so we can relax out there. One March Sunday, it was warm enough to eat dinner on the porch, and then the temps dropped to the 20s the next week. As you well know, we dust it off, and within hours, it’s covered in pollen once again. Wouldn’t it be nice if the pollen ended earlier this year too? Regardless, it’s safe to say spring has sprung.

Above all, remember that smart home technologies are meant to enhance your experience in your own home. Will investing in these technologies sell your house? Not necessarily. However, they may focus a buyer on your home over another one. If you are considering taking the plunge into making your home a smart home, go ahead and dip a toe in the water. A thermostat may not clean your house and do your laundry, but you will love having the ability to raise the temperature a few degrees if you are arriving at your mountain house on a chilly fall evening. As for me, I'm still hoping for Rosie!

Via Satellite ‘Hedda Gabler’ at PAC

The Highlands Performing Arts Center will present Live via Satellite the National Theatre of London’s production of Hedda Gabler by Ibsen on Saturday, April 15th at 1pm. “I’ve no talent for life.” Just married. Bored already. Hedda longs to be free...Hedda and Tesman have just returned from their honeymoon and the relationship is already in trouble. Trapped but determined, Hedda tries to control those around her, only to see her own world unravel. Ruth Wilson (Luther, The Affair, Jane Eyre) plays the title role in a new version by Patrick Marber (Notes on a Scandal, Closer). Tickets are available online: www.highlandspac.org – at the door or by calling 828.526.9047 Highlands Performing Arts Center 507 Chestnut Street.
The angel said to the women, “Do not be afraid; for I know that you are looking for Jesus who has been crucified. He is not here, for He has risen just as He said. Come see the place where He was lying.” (Matthew 28:5-6). The historical validity of the resurrection of Jesus is the capstone of the Christian faith. Because of this, it has been the focal point for criticism by unbelievers, and attempts to accommodate it to modern sensibilities by the less than orthodox of the faith. It is as if the latter are ashamed to believe in a literal resurrection of Christ, just as they are averse to expressing in clear terms the reason Jesus Christ, the Son of God came to this world in His First Advent— to shed His blood and die for our sins. It all sounds so unsophisticated, so narrow in scope, so intolerant and judgmental to proclaim our need of the Living Savior!

The objections to the validity of the resurrection are as old as the resurrection itself. There is the “ swoon theory” or belief that Jesus didn’t really die, but went into a comatose state, only later to be revived. There is the oldest one – even recorded by the Bible – that somehow the disciples bribed the guards and stole the body to perpetuate one – even recorded by the Bible – that somehow the disciples bribed the guards and stole the body to perpetuate...

agendas. The root of all our problems – social, moral and political – have a common root, the root of sin. It is this that must be addressed, and the church must return to its historical and biblical message of our Lord, who died on the cross for those sins, and lives again in all of us who believe, even as He literally lives and reigns at the right hand of the Father. The inequities in our world, the chaos in our political arena, the inequalities in our social constructs, and our moral decay will not be rectified by good intentions, elections, jurisprudence, social engineering or protests. The cure is in the confession of our sins, accepting God’s sacrifice of His Son on the cross, and in our profession, that He is truly alive, living to intercede for us, filling us with His Spirit to produce the fruits of righteousness, and coming again to make all things new and right. This is the truth of the Resurrection!

Production artwork winners

The creations of local students will be posters and T-shirts for the PAC Youth Theater production of "The Frog Prince," Thurs., April 27-30 at the Highlands Performing Arts Center. From left are Katy Potts, of Blue Ridge Early College, who won the Program Art Design and Paige and Trent Bryson from Blue Ridge School who won for poster designs.
