Students’ well-being and school safety on front burner for BOE

School safety has been a constant conversation across the nation in the last month, with everything from arming teachers to locked campuses being debated on all levels.

Last week, during the March meeting of the MC Board of Education, local leaders discussed the importance of students’ well-being and school safety.

Once a year, local leaders have the chance to meet with U.S. government leaders during the annual National Association of County (NACo) legislative conference. This year, county leaders travelled to Washington D.C. to meet with federal leaders to address specific federal policies that impact the citizens of Macon County.

Macon County Board of Commissioner Chairman Jim Tate, along with Vice Chair Ronnie Beale and County Manager Derek Roland made the trip and spent the week meeting with leaders such as Congressman Mark Meadows.

The week was spent discussing matters that directly impact Macon County residents such as securing a long-term plan for

MC Sheriff’s Office asks Hispanic community’s help in solving murder

Last Wednesday morning, March 28, two deputies with the Macon County Sheriff’s Office stopped to investigate an abandoned 2003 Chevrolet Silverado on the side of the road in the Holly Springs Community, just a mile outside of Franklin when they found two male bodies.

The vehicle, which according to reports had been on the side of the road since as early as Saturday, was located off Jack Cabe Road.

MCSO deputies noticed the vehicle keys, along with personal items were still inside the cab of the truck.

While trying to gain additional information, deputies looked in the back of the truck, which was covered by a fiberglass tonneau cover and found the bodies of two deceased males. The MCSO immediately contacted the State Bureau of Investigation for additional information.

On writing a weekly column...

I don't know what to write about this week. The mayor has writer's block! I frequently receive positive feedback from folks who tell me they read my column. I am always honored that people take time to read what I have to say about what is going on in town government. This feedback motivates me to continue writing every week.

A major goal each week is to keep the column limited to exactly 500 words. If I go beyond that number I know I am not conveying information clearly. Invariably, my first draft of the column is somewhere between 550 to 650 words. I then do a second review where I assess just what I have written, and what I really need to communicate.

By the third draft I am usually approaching 520 to 530 words. At that point I try to use economical sentence structure to refine what I am attempting to communicate. The exercise normally stops when I attain 500 words.

It takes me about an hour or two to write a column. There have been a few pieces where I exceeded the 500 count because I just can't address an important issue with fewer words. Those situations are few and far between.

Life is ironic. I took journalism in high school and my teacher, Mable Wolinski, was not impressed with my journalistic potential. Upon completing the class, several of my friends were selected to serve as prestigious staff members of the school newspaper, The ‘Dosta. Needless to say, I was not selected. My contributions were occasional cartoons created from my bedroom desk.

Ms. Wolinski was right, I wasn’t a writer. I couldn’t spell, my sentence structure was pitiful, and my thought patterns were contorted at best. I received a merciful C in her class.

Educators have developed continuous assessment models. All initial assessments involve grading class performance. Later assessments focus on longterm outcomes. In the longterm I went on to do some reporting and writing for my college newspaper. The editor also assessed my efforts as marginally acceptable. Frankly, they had nobody else to write for the paper. I must say I had one “Pulitzer Prize quality” article where I conducted a street interview with Lester Maddox during his successful campaign for governor. I probably got the interview because I was the only reporter covering him that day. The editor was shocked by my insightful analysis that he was a viable candidate.

In the longterm, I have probably written more newspaper articles than my schoolmates of those past newspaper staffs. Hopefully, I have obtained a modicum of redemption. My journalism teacher taught me important lessons that I still remember and struggle to practice, like creating a good lead, and writing at a simple fifth grade reading level. I would be challenged to write beyond that level, and I am plagued by stupid mistakes like calling a bald eagle a “ball” eagle in a recent piece.

I truly value communicating with Highlanders by writing this weekly column.

A memorial service will be held 1 pm on Sunday, May 20, 2018 at the Sapphire Valley Community Center.
Unfortunately, digestive disorders are on the increase. About 38 million Americans suffer from a variety of digestive problems such as GERD, irritable bowel syndrome, celiac disease, food allergies, diverticulitis, ulcerative colitis, and Crohn’s disease. Approximately 25 million Americans have daily heartburn and it is estimated that 20% of the adult population have irritable bowel syndrome. Celiac disease, once considered rare, is now thought to affect 1 in 133 people, and food allergies have increased alarmingly.

Why is this happening? Several reasons come to mind: stressful lifestyles, environmental pollution, and the American diet are a start. The standard American diet tends to be high in carbs and sugar and low in fiber and healthy fats. Not only can this contribute to digestive problems but also to obesity, diabetes, heart disease and cancer, as we know. Another factor in the increase of digestive disorders is an imbalance of gut microbes.

But how can illness be related to gut health when the stomach feels just fine? Because digestion has multiple phases, but poor function in any phase can contribute to many illnesses, including allergies, autism, autoimmune disease, and chronic fatigue syndrome. When the proper function of the gut has been challenged, the effects can initially be subtle, but over time become profound. They say we are what we eat, but more truly, we are what we absorb.

The first phase of digestion takes place in the mouth and the second phase is in the stomach, which alerts us with pain, bloating or gas when something is wrong. This is where food is mainly broken down. The third phase takes place in the small intestines, which don’t always have a direct way to tell us there’s a problem. Here food is further digested and then absorbed into the body. The fourth phase (elimination of waste and toxins) takes place in the colon. If food is properly processed in the mouth and stomach, the intestines will receive partially digested food that it further breaks down using enzymes and beneficial bacteria.

These enzymes can be low from poor eating habits or chronic illness. Temporary replacement with plant enzymes is often warranted. Beneficial bacteria can also be out of balance due to antibiotic use, heavy metal toxicity, steroid prescriptions, birth control pills or an unfriendly gut environment. This imbalance can range from a simple lack of normal bacteria to an invasion of infectious species (including parasites and yeast). Reestablishing a healthy bacterial population is essential to getting the intestines back in order, like spreading grass seed on a lawn to crowd out weeds. The intestines have a lining to act as a barrier. When inflammation disrupts this barrier, unbroken down food can pass through and enter the body, an all too common condition known as “leaky gut”.

The immune system responds to these large food particles as invaders. This signals other immune factors, resulting in a heightened immune response, which can lead to allergies, autoimmune disease or arthritis-type pain. Gut wall inflammation can also decrease the ability to absorb food properly, leading to low body nutrients. Thus, healing the lining is the place to begin gut rehabilitation.

Common Irritants/Causes of Inflammation
In recent years we have come to appreciate our body’s amazing ecosystem, the balance of friendly and potentially harmful microorganisms that live in our gut. This balance can be disturbed by antibiotic therapy, birth control pills, steroid drugs, chemotherapy, physical and emotional stress, as well as by food allergens, preservatives, food dyes, MSG, aspartame, steroids and hormones in meats, coffee, cigarette smoke, pesticides, salon products and building materials.

When out of balance, harmful bacteria, yeast or parasites can overwhelm. This is called intestinal dysbiosis. Friendly bacteria in our gut are of prime importance in keeping our digestive tract as well as our immune system healthy. What is not always easily recognized is that poor gut health also greatly contributes to many systemic conditions: such as allergies, asthma, eczema, ADHD, autism, chronic fatigue syndrome, fibromyalgia, arthritis, headaches and insomnia. Fortunately, many of these conditions can be improved with treatment. There are many ways to look for and treat nutritional deficiencies, low stomach acid, intestinal dysbiosis including yeast, food allergies and heavy metal toxicity. Resting the gut with a short-term allergy free diet, is critical for healing acute inflammation. A long-term method of avoiding inflammation is to rotate irritating foods out of the diet for 3 to 4 day periods. An individual should ideally identify which foods they are personally sensitive to, but a good starting point is the “Dirty Dozen” or top 12 food allergens: wheat, egg, corn, peanuts, cow’s milk, soy, chocolate, shellfish, nightshade vegetables, oranges, tree nuts and alcohol.

In ADHD, for example, food...

allergies and yeast overgrowth in the intestine can exacerbate or cause hyperactivity and attention deficits. There are many studies that show an improvement in ADHD behaviors when allergies are addressed by elimination diets or desensitization. And according to parent rating surveys collected from thousands of parents by the ARI (Autism Research Institute), a gluten-free casein-free diet resulted in improvements in 66% of autistic children, food allergy treatment caused improvements in 64% of autistic children, and an anti-Candida diet had good results in 55%. So what are some things we need to maintain good digestion, absorption and elimination?

Healthy digestion actually begins with making the time to enjoy an unhurried and relaxing meal. Many studies have proven that it is not just WHAT we eat, or WHY we eat that is important—it is also HOW we choose to consume a meal: whether we are sitting at a table with a relaxing view or driving in rush hour traffic will have an enormous impact on how well we are able to digest our meal. Taking a moment to be thankful for our food is a wonderful way to prepare both body and mind to slow down so that it can properly receive a meal.

Secondly, adequate stomach acid is very important to sterilize food, start the breakdown of proteins and act as a signal for the release of bile when the acidic food bolus reaches the small intestine. Chronic use of antacids and an infection called H.pylori can cause low stomach acid. If stomach acid is low, proteins are only partially broken down, and food allergies can result. Also, minerals like iron and calcium are poorly absorbed without adequate stomach acid. Low stomach acid is also associated with increased inhalant allergies, asthma and skin conditions like eczema.

Other factors needed for adequate digestion are bile, enzymes, normal peristaltic action (movement of the gut muscules to help the food bolus travel down the gut), a healthy intact gut lining, a wealth of research has been conducted in the last several years on the use of probiotics or good bacteria for gut health.

Future of the Veterans Administration

Last week, President Donald J. Trump fired the Secretary of the Department of Veterans Affairs, David J. Shulkin. In what has to be one of the most thankless jobs in American government, his replacement, Dr. Ronny Jackson, will become the 10th Secretary of Veterans Affairs since the current iteration of the department was established in 1989. That’s about one secretary every three years.

Perhaps the reason secretaries of the VA don’t stay longer is because the VA has devolved into an exercise in impossible governance. It’s overextended and underfunded. It’s also an antiquated concept attempting to execute an unworkable business model.

Our failure to provide adequate healthcare for the millions of American men and women who served and sacrificed for our country is a national disgrace.

I don’t say these things lightly. I’m a proud veteran. I served in the U.S. Air Force from 1961 to 1965 and was honorably discharged. The VA guaranteed my first mortgage. If the VA changed its focus from that of a direct service provider to an earned benefits delivery organization, in the image of the Social Security Administration, it could transform itself into one of the most effective and efficient entities in the federal government.

In 2014, the VA had 341,000 employees. It likely has more today. The Social Security Administration, by comparison, has 60,000 employees. There are 8.92 million veterans enrolled in the VA’s health care system. There are 56 million Americans receiving Social Security benefits. If healthcare services for America’s veterans were provided by civilian physicians, clinics, and hospitals, but paid for through the Veterans Administration’s existing pension disbursement infrastructure, on the same or a similar reimbursement schedule as Medicare and Medicaid, the cost savings would be significant and the veterans would receive their care in a much more effective and timely manner.

The VA already does this successfully in the disbursement of Veterans’ pension benefits. Why then, does the VA persist on engaging in activities in which it doesn’t excel, such as providing health care in 150 hospitals and 820 community-based clinics? Do veterans live in only 150 communities, or even 820 communities? Of course not. Veterans live everywhere, both in the United States and around the world. But if they wish to access their earned healthcare benefits they often can only do so at one of these facilities.

The VA built these facilities at great cost to American taxpayers but has failed when it comes to actually delivering, in an effective and efficient manner, the health care services their constituents need and deserve. The U.S. government doesn’t build hospitals and clinics to provide Medicare and Medicaid services to America’s elderly and poor. We, taxpayers, provide payment for these services, and both Medicare and Medicaid patients receive these healthcare services more effectively and efficiently than do America’s veterans.

A few years after I left the Air Force in June of 1965 I applied for, and was granted assistance with college tuition under the Servicemen’s Readjustment Act of 1944, better known as the GI Bill. I wasn’t sent to a GI or Veterans University built at taxpayer expense. There weren’t any of those. There also weren’t any GI or Veterans professors hired at taxpayer expense conducting the classes. I attended the college of my choice, which was staffed by professional professors. Payment was sent directly to the school I attended. It was quick, easy and it worked.

Veterans have earned their benefits. The U.S. Department of Veteran Affairs no longer needs be in the business of providing direct services, or building facilities such as hospitals, clinics, nursing homes, rehab centers, even cemeteries. Veterans aren’t and shouldn’t be separate from the rest of society. They are us.

The time has surely arrived when our nation can agree that veterans deserve at least the same quality healthcare as the rest of society. It’s time to honor the commitment. Pay for the promises made to America’s veterans and let them decide on their own physician, hospital and final resting place.
Which children’s books do you remember?

Seeing a Facebook post about best loved Golden Books took me on a trip down memory lane as I recalled my favorite childhood books.

High on that list was "The Poky Little Puppy," and a bit of research revealed that it ranks as the top-selling children’s book of all time. When I tried to call to mind other Golden Books I loved, "The Three Little Kittens" was the only additional one that popped up.

Never fear, I recall plenty of other books I enjoyed. I have fond memories of Mom taking me to the library, I think on Saturdays. “Angus and the Ducks” is one of the books I checked out repeatedly. It’s the story of a little black terrier who discovers ducks one day when he sneaks out of his house. As an adult, I thought of that book every time I saw a friend’s dog run into the lake to chase the ducks.

I have forgotten plenty of books from my early years, but I had a delightful experience surfing Amazon. It took seeing the covers to make me remember my favorites.

If my memory of the covers is that vivid, I know I must have read those books over and over. When I clicked on Angus, I was rewarded with the cover of “Make Way for Ducklings,” triggering another happy memory.

The “Curious George” series was another favorite, one that has stood the test of time. This summer I spent the day with my high school friend Beth as she made my dog a royal purple robe—you know about Lord Banjo and his robe, right? I had to laugh when I discovered she’d been making party favors for her grandson’s Curious George birthday party just the week before.

I still have my three Dr. Seuss books. They came in the mail as part of the Beginner Books series by Random House, which also included non-Seuss books: “Stop that Ball,” “Cowboy Andy,” and “The King’s Wish.”

Another book I could remember even without seeing the cover was “The Five Chinese Brothers.” Before locating it on Amazon, I thought to myself that in this age of heightened sensitivity, it had probably been banned. I couldn’t readily remember the story, but the description, “a dramatic retelling of an old Chinese tale,” makes it seem harmless enough.

Trigger warning! The childhood book that has indeed been banned from some libraries is “Little Black Sambo,” originally published in 1899. Because the title and illustrations in the original are considered offensive, it was reworked in later tellings. The title and the setting change, but the story remains the same: “[A little boy] encounters four hungry tigers and surrenders his colorful new clothes, shoes, and umbrella so they will not eat him. The tigers are vain, and each thinks he is better dressed than the others. They chase each other around a tree until they are reduced to a pool of melted butter; [the boy] then recovers his clothes, and his mother makes pancakes of the butter.”

To end on an uncontroversial note, I also spied “The Story of Ferdinand,” a book that’s now been made into an animated movie. What wonderful childhood memories.

in both children and adults. It seems that without friendly bacteria our immune system would not develop. We don’t often think of our gut when we think of the immune system, yet 80% of our immune tissue actually resides in the gut and is called gut-associated lymphoid tissue or GALT. A newborn baby’s gut is sterile. It acquires microorganisms during delivery, and then from the environment, which then colonize the gut. Experiments done on monkeys have proven that without these friendly bacteria the immune system does not mature. One of the common types of harmful overgrowth in the gut is yeast or Candida overgrowth. Intestinal yeast can cause a variety of gut symptoms such as bloating, indigestion, constipation, diarrhea, and leaky gut. Yeast also produces toxins which can get absorbed and cause systemic symptoms such as sinus congestion, joint pains, headaches, fogginess, fatigue, and depression to name a few.

The intestines are the first line of immune defense, disabling invaders before they can get into the body, as well as our pathway to assimilate what we need to survive. Soluble and insoluble fiber can help them stay healthy by absorbing toxins, waste products, and excess hormones and fats and carry them out the back door as they go. Fiber builds bulk which stimulates the gut to contract and empty, improving constipation and diarrhea, and is also our primary food source for normal bacteria in the gut. As well as including lots of fresh, organic vegetables and fruits that provide fiber, the biggest part of “eating right” includes limiting sugars and grains. If you are eating as many sugars as the typical American, then you are feeding the “bad” bacteria rather than promoting the “good” bacteria that help protect you from disease.

In addition to limiting the sugar and grains you eat, it’s also necessary to eat plenty of rich probiotic sources, and these come from fermented foods. Fermented foods are part of nearly every traditional culture. As far back as Roman times, people ate sauerkraut because of its taste and benefits to overall health. In ancient Indian society it became commonplace (and still is) to enjoy a before-dinner yogurt drink called a lassi. Bulgarians are known both for their longevity and their high consumption of fermented milk and kefir. In Asian cultures, delicious and healthy pickled fermentations of cabbage, turnips, eggplant, cucumbers, onions, squash and carrots still exist today. If you can avoid exposure to both the external and internal toxins and allergens, and eat a diet rich in whole and fermented foods that have NOT been pasteurized, then you are on your way to reversing the many disorders that start in the gut and enjoying vibrant overall health.

(StatePoint) Building a new home? Overhauling an existing one? Here are three renovation ideas that will add beauty and value.

Expand Your Living Space
Don’t let that basement sit unfinished and unused. Substantially expand your home’s livable areas by turning your attention to the bottom floor. Finishing a basement is an involved project, potentially requiring electrical and plumbing work, insulation, drywall and more -- but the end result is worth the effort and expense. What’s more, some of the less technical aspects of this renovation could even be DIY-ed.

Before getting started, consider what type of space would most benefit your household long-term. You may even be able to recoup some cost of the investment. For example, turning your basement into an at-home fitness center means ditching the costly gym membership. Want to reduce time and money on your commute? Your basement may just make an ideal home office.

Add a Focal Point
Is your interior design in need of a little something? The right eye-catching elements can make a room pop while adding vitality to your living spaces. A fireplace, for example, adds ambiance and comfort while also creating a natural gathering space.

What’s more, new models pair the charm of a traditional open-front fireplace with the design flexibility of gas models. The Phoenix TrueView from Heat & Glo offers the convenience of gas without the glass, giving homeowners an unobscured view of the flames against the traditional brick or fade-resistant reflective black glass liner. An optional Bluetooth speaker system allows one to hear the fire as well as see it -- making it a focal point for the ears as well as the eyes.

Boost the Backyard
If you find that your household spends very little time in the backyard, figure out why. Is there a lack of shade? Are there not enough places to sit? Take a poll so you can diagnose the problem and take steps to correct it. Consider also how to make this space usable for a larger portion of the year, such as adding a fire pit or an enclosed, heated patio. Lastly, consider aesthetics. A bit of landscaping can make your backyard as visually appealing as your home’s interiors.

This season, consider the renovations that will go furthest to boost your home’s livability, beauty and value.

Innovative New Looks for Your Kitchen Renovation

(StatePoint) Renovating your kitchen? Think about making updates that will add beauty and functionality to one of the most important rooms in the house. Here are a few innovative new looks and ideas to consider including in your plans.

Add Geometry

Geometric tile designs can create a bold modernized look in your kitchen, whether you're adding a backsplash or redoing the flooring. Get creative by adding a mosaic design as trim around the perimeter or as a central point of focus.

Create Your Focal Point

Enhance any kitchen with an impressive new range that combines the functionality and green energy features of a modern appliance with the charm of old-world design. If you want an opportunity to tailor this look to your own specifications, consider those from ILVE. Known for their handcrafted Italian appliances, they have added even more ways to customize their ranges with a new, traditionally inspired solid door option for the ILVE Majestic Collection.

Get Cozy

Create a lounge in your kitchen with some furniture that lets you kick back and relax. A nook that contains a loveseat or couch, along with a small bookshelf and side table, may become your new favorite place to look through cookbooks or read a few pages of a novel while you're waiting for the dough to rise. If possible, create this area in a sunlit corner of the kitchen that's convenient to where the main cooking action takes place, so that those giving the chef a little company will have a comfortable place to sit and chat with their host.

Innovative new looks for your kitchen can transform the space into one that's more functional and beautiful.

Easter in Highlands
The term adulting has gone viral on social media, and in case you’re not sure what it means, it’s a simple word, often used as a hashtag explaining ones struggle with facing adult responsibilities such as getting married, having children, and well, ordinary situations in which adults are faced. #Adulting or #AdultingIsHard is huge on sites like Twitter and Instagram. You may read things like “I paid my bills instead of going out with friends. #AdultingIsHard” or “I didn’t sign up for this! #Adulting.” When you think back to the sitcom FRIENDS which ran from 1994-2004, it was all about adulting, friends living in the city, sharing living space to make ends meet while finding out all about life as it happens.

According to March 2018 Insight report on Freddiemac.com, adulting may be keeping the housing market from reaching its full potential. Today’s young adults/millennials aged 21-37 are slower to reach traditional milestones of adulthood like getting married, entering the work force, having children, and many are living at home or sharing homes with friends. In their defense, the last 8-10 years haven’t been conducive for most young adults who want to buy their first home. Home prices were slow to stabilize, weak wage growth, while their healthcare and education expenditures went through the roof.

Young adult buyers in the year 2000 had a 3.6% jump over 2016 buyers in the headship rate. Headship rate is the term of heading a household. 3.6% doesn’t sound like much, but it represents about 1.6 million additional households in 2016.

According to the PEW Research Center, nearly one in three young adults shared a household in 2016. Fifteen percent live with their parents, up 5% than in 2000. In addition, when these young adults leave their parents’ home, they often share living expenses with roommates. This group as a whole has a lower marriage rate, lower childbirth rate, lower employment rate, higher education (along with student debt), all while the cost of living has risen exponentially. This age group faces not what their parents faced, but possibly what their grandparents and great-grandparents faced coming out of the depression. The world is such a different place now, having many other components to the equation of first-time home ownership.

So, what’s the future for the US housing market? Assuming current trends continue over the next 10 years, if you’re an optimist: income goes up about 15% while housing costs stay somewhat fixed allowing for more first-time buyers as well as repeat buyers, and second- and third-home buyers. If you’re a pessimist, you need help. No really, the pessimistic housing outlook is that housing markets deteriorate because income levels stagnate causing the continuing decline of first-time buyers.

While these statistics refer to the US housing market as a whole, I think our mountain area market will always be a little different.

I’ve been selling Highlands real estate for 26 years, and I’ve seen subtle changes that follow national trends creeping up more and more each season. Our market has always followed Florida and Georgia market trends, but it took longer to reach us than it does now. While we are predominately a second-home marketplace, there are plenty of young adults in this area that would consider a first-time home purchase.

In March 2018, the Highlands-Cashiers MLS sold 46 properties (residential) ranging from $80,000 to $2,450,000. showing that our area has a diverse offering of properties. There’s almost something for everyone looking to buy a property, whether a seasoned adult or young adult. My advice? Adulting can be hard at any age, but don’t let a label define your dreams.

Empty Tomb: A Death Blow to Death

Rector Jim Murphy
Christ Anglican Church

e’re taught from an early age that “death” is the end of the road. When you’re dead, so it has been said, “Death is the third and final strike after the third out of the last inning, game over!” And so that might seem to be the case. The case, at least, to those without vision, foresight and faith. But that is not what the Christian faith believes nor knows to be the case.

Instead, death is the gateway to eternal life. For all those who have the eyes to see, Jesus’ empty tomb obliterated the myth of death as being the final arbiter. Bodily death is just another beginning of a whole new dimension of life that will never end. The following true story, demonstrates the vision of the prescient Christian, as opposed to the pseudo-wisdom of the informed skeptic.

“Little Philip, born with Down’s syndrome, attended a third-grade Sunday School class with several eight-year-old boys and girls. Typical of that age, the children did not readily accept Philip with his differences, according to an article in leadership magazine. But because of a creative teacher, they began to care about Philip and accept him as part of the group, though not fully.”

“The Sunday after Easter the teacher brought L’eggs pantyhose containers, the kind that look like large eggs. Each receiving one, the children were told to go outside on that lovely spring day, find some symbol for new life, and put it in the egg-like container. Back in the classroom, they would share their new-life symbols, opening the containers one by one in surprise fashion. After running about the church property in wild confusion, the students returned to the classroom and placed the containers on the table. Surrounded by the children, the teacher began to open them one by one. After each one, whether a flower, butterfly, or leaf, the class would ooh and ahh.

Then one was opened, revealing nothing inside. The children exclaimed, 'That’s stupid. That’s not fair. Somebody didn’t do their assignment.' Philip spoke up, ‘That’s mine.’”

“‘Philip, you don’t ever do things right!’ the student retorted. ‘There’s nothing there!’ ‘I did so do it,’ Philip insisted. ‘I did it. It’s empty. The tomb was empty!’”

Silence followed. From then on Philip became a full member of the class. He died not long afterward from an infection most normal children would have shrugged off. At the funeral this class of eight-year-olds marched up to the altar not with flowers, but with their Sunday school teacher, each to lay on it an empty pantyhose egg.”

Philip became the teacher of faith. Hecould see and understand what the empty tomb meant. It meant life unconfined, life with no limits. Philip’s classmates brought items that were limited in scope, dimension and duration—things that were passing away. His empty egg was, on the other hand, full of life and possibilities. Philip liked that, he wanted it.

Jesus’ empty tomb means that death does not have the final say for believers. Instead, the open tomb is the doorway to eternal life. Philip is there now. Alleluia, Christ is risen. He is risen indeed, alleluia!

wounds, but the official cause of death will be released later, after the autopsies are completed.

As with any homicide case, MC Sheriff Robert Holland said the department is limited as to what it can release so as not to interfere or hinder the investigation or the judicial process.

“With any ongoing investigation, the information that is available to the public is limited,” said Sheriff Holland. “We know that we need the public’s help, especially that of the Hispanic community.”

Since the investigation was launched last week, Sheriff Holland has made a plea to the Hispanic community assuring them that those who come forward will not be questioned about their legal status and are just wanted to help solve the case.

Tuesday morning, Sheriff Holland identified a suspect, Maximino Rios-Diaz, who is wanted for questioning in the double homicide.

Rios-Diaz currently resides on Hayes Mills Road in Franklin, but was last seen by his family on March 24 and may be traveling to Mexico.

On Tuesday, April 3, MCSO was on scene at 535 Hayswmill Road continuing the investigation.

Anyone with information related to this case is encouraged to call (828)349-2107 or CrimeStoppers at (828)349-2600.

ucation, Superintendent Dr. Chris Baldwin addressed the board and said that moving forward there were two areas of improvements he would like to see made regarding the district’s mental health services as well as the physical security of schools across the county.

Dr. Baldwin said there is a mental health services shortfall in MC schools, like in other districts across the state and country. He said understaffing of mental health professionals is rampant.

“Schools are not immune to mental health issues, but they are very, very limited in terms of the resources available,” said Dr. Baldwin.

For Macon County Schools, there are three full-time and two part-time school psychologists responsible for the district’s 4,500 students. There are two social workers assigned to the schools -- one per 2,250 students. Macon County Schools employees 10 full-time and one part-time school counselor(s). There is one counselor for each school. Franklin High School South Macon Elementary have one counselor per 450-500 students. Macon Middle School and Mountain View Intermediate have one counselor per 600 students.

“If Nicholas Cruz, [the Parkland shooter] had had his mental health issues addressed early on, there may be 17 people who would still be alive today,” said Dr. Baldwin. “We are talking about doing something in our school system that could possibly save lives.”

North Carolina leaders addressed the statewide shortage of mental health professionals earlier this month during the first meeting of the House Select Committee on School Safety, an initiative started by House Speaker Tim Moore.

During the meeting, experts spoke to the house committee regarding how ill-equipped schools are to evaluate children with mental illness and predict who is most inclined to act violently.

Troubled students sent home because of suspension or expulsion are most at risk of becoming isolated, said Greta Metcalf, who works for a behavioral health services provider and is a member of the state’s Task Force for Safer Schools.

Jim Deni a professor at Appalachian State University and past president of the N.C. School Psychology Association addressed the committee with these concerning statistics:

• 1 in 5 North Carolina children has a mental health or substance use disorder and 75 percent will not receive treatment in the current system.
• North Carolina has about one school psychologist for every 2,100 students, and the nationally recommended ratio is 1 for every 700 students.
• About 80 percent of North Carolina parents polled say they don’t believe their child’s school has enough funding to deal with children’s social and emotional health.

Deni recommended increasing funding for school psychologists, counselors and social workers.

“I’d have a school psychologist in every school and a social worker in every school and I think we’d all be pretty busy,” Deni said.

She said additional mental health professionals within the school system would allow teachers and staff to address concerns before they become greater issues. According to district leaders, now school staff are only able to “put out large fires” rather than preemptively address concerns.

Improving physical security of school buildings was another topic Dr. Baldwin addressed. He told board members the district’s capital outlay needs and previously OK’d budget requests may shift, pending an evaluation of the physical security of school buildings.

District leaders will be holding a budget work session on April 10 at 9 a.m. at the central office to reprioritize capital outlay requests to focus on physical school security needs.

Referencing an incident in Hoke County, where an individual was able to gain entry during the school day and assault a teacher while looking for another, Macon County Schools consultant Todd Gibbs said that addressing entry points and access during the school day is something that needs to be closely examined and improved.

“Ultimately, we want to do whatever we can, in every approach we can, to ensure that our children are as safe as possible,” said Dr. Baldwin.

Some solutions to improving physical access include installing locks on the inside of classrooms, re-fitting old schools and planning new school construction with more safety features. The floor plans of all public schools have been uploaded into a digital database so that emergency responders can access school layouts in a crisis.

Dr. Baldwin said Mike Anderson with the NC Center for Safer Schools will be in the district before the April 10 meeting to help evaluate district needs in terms of safety.

Highlander Oscar McMullen named Regional STAR Student at Rabun Gap

The Student-Teacher Achievement Recognition (STAR) Program, organized by the Professional Association of Georgia Educators, honors the state’s top-achieving seniors and their inspirational teachers. To secure the STAR nomination, high school seniors must have the highest score of the SAT taken and be in the top-10 percent or top 10 students of their class based on GPA. Rabun Gap’s region includes high schools in Dawson, Fannin, Gainesville, Gilmer, Habersham, Lumpkin, Pickens, Rabun, Stephens, Towns, Union, White, and Hall counties, as well as Mountain Education.

PILT (Payment in Lieu of Taxes) dollars. A payment in lieu of taxes is a payment made to compensate a government — in this case Macon County — for some or all of the property tax revenue lost due to tax-exempt ownership or use of real property — in this case, USFS lands in Macon County.

“The federal government has a tremendous impact on our local budget,” said Roland. “For example, in 2017 Macon County received approximately $7,216,516 in federal funding which represented almost 15 percent of the operating budget. These monies are key not only to Macon County operations but to the operations of entities such as the school system as well (PILT, SRS). The opportunity to relay the importance of this funding to our legislators in a one-on-one setting is extremely important.”

Just as important as the federal funding contained within the county’s operating budget such as PILT funding, are the federal funds received by agencies via direct benefit payments which are not included in the local operating budget.

In 2017, approximately $32,136,616 was received by Macon County in direct benefit payments for medical assistance programs, WIC, TANF, adoption, foster care and NC Health Choice. Funding for these programs while not reflected in the local operating budget, is heavily relied upon by county agencies and has a substantial impact on the level of service these agencies are able to provide for Macon County citizens.

With federal funds having such a huge impact on local operations, Commissioner Tate said the opportunity to be in the room with the people who make the decisions that impact Macon County was invaluable.

“We attended the legislative breakfast which was comprised of all of the commissioners attending from NC along with the entire NC Delegation [all 13 U.S. House members and both U.S. Senators],” said Tate. “When it was Rep. Mark Meadows’ time to address the crowd, he used his time-frame to point out just how important it is for us as commissioners to make the trip to D.C. to meet with our congressmen and senators and have the ‘conversation’ about our issues. He then recognized Derek, myself and Ronnie by name and he portrayed the long-standing relationship he has with each of us and just how productive our time together had been.

For Rep. Meadows to personally point out our efforts to all of our peers was a great feeling and one that I will never forget.”

Tate serves as the Chair on the Macon County Board of Commissioners, and occupies the seat on the board designated to represent the Highlands District of Macon County. Tate took advantage of his trip to D.C. to not just work for Macon County, but to also work for Highlands.

“Perhaps the most impactful thing that I did for the Town of Highlands was to hand-deliver packets containing references and an application to both US Senators and our Congressman asking that Mayor Pat Taylor be appointed to the Intergency Advisory Council for the FCC,” said Tate. “The Mayor (as usual) continues to work extremely hard for the town, and his willingness to seek out and serve on a Federal committee to benefit all of us is noteworthy. His desire to bring knowledge from a small rural municipality regarding the complicated issues with broadband and information technology to the national level is a fine example of one of his many leadership qualities. While visiting with Congressman Meadows, I personally watched him send an email to President Trump’s staff requesting that the Mayor be appointed.”

Roland noted that addressing broadband infrastructure in rural regions such as Western North Carolina was a common discussion while in the Nation’s Capital.

“We were able to discuss in-depth, the issue of broadband expansion and urge our legislators to strongly consider providing digital infrastructure funding along with revised legislation that clarifies current FCC definitions for speed thresholds and underserved areas, all of which would assist us locally in our broadband expansion efforts,” said Roland.

Time will tell if concerns raised will be addressed at the Federal level.
