Toters replace dumpsters to deter bears

After a season of rogue bears roaming Highlands’ business district night and day, serious talk began during the March 2019 Town Board retreat outlining ways to combat the situation.

Since whether in the business or residential districts, bears are always after garbage, the Town Board made the decision to bite the financial bullet and invest in bear-proof and bear-resistant trash receptacles.

In less than a year, bearproof trash containers were planted all over the business district and last week, unsightly dumpsters in

How the right car seat and proper installation can keep your children alive

Brittney Lofthouse
Safe Kids Macon County Chairman

Five years ago, shortly after partnering with the Sheriff’s Office to begin a Safe Kids coalition in Macon County, I went through a 5-day course to become a certified car seat technician. During the rigorous five-day course, taught by experts who traveled here from Raleigh, I learned all about the most common mistakes when installing a car seat, I learned which car seat is best for a child’s age or size, and even which seat is best based on a specific vehicle. We practiced installation on dolls before finishing the week with a free car seat safety inspection station for the community.

Over the last five years, as the Chairman of Safe Kids Macon County, I have organized a dozen car seat safety events that have checked over 500 car seats. Sometimes those car seat checks were for my friends or coworkers, but most of them were for complete strangers who I have not spoken to since. It is widely known that car seat safety is a great passion of mine and something I constantly advocate for.

Last Friday, all of those years of car seat safety and helping others became my own reality when I got a phone call that my mother and my four-year-old niece were in a rollover accident. Their vehicle didn’t just rollover, but it rolled off the bank and landed upside down in a creek. My husband and I rushed to the scene and by the time we got there, both my mother and niece were safely out of the vehicle. Seeing that car upside down with water rushing through the inside was gut wrenching. I immediately began searching for my mother and niece who were in the ambulance. Worst case scenario flashed through my mind.

It was a big day for Highlands School students. First the Homecoming Court rode in the parade Saturday, Dec. 7 and then they got ready for the annual Homecoming Dance. This year the dance was held at Coleman Hall in the First Presbyterian Church where seniors Dillion Schmitt and Jeslyn Head were crowned King and Queen. For more photos see page 14.

Learning on the job

Our new commissioner, Marc Hehn, and I attended the Essentials of Municipal Government Workshop last week. This workshop was sponsored by the University of North Carolina School of Government and the North Carolina League of Municipalities. It was my third workshop, and for Marc his first.

I attend these workshops because I always learn something new about municipal government. Invariably there are changes to municipal statutes.

Highlands is a member of the UNC School of Government and the NC League of Municipalities. Both organizations support towns and cities. They are important resources and consultants for member municipalities.

Mike Smith, the Dean of the UNC School of Government, was at the workshop. I had the opportunity to thank him personally for the 16 years that I have relied on the school as a critical professional resource. I was a magistrate for 10 years before currently serving 6 years as mayor. The School of Government also trains personnel in the state’s court and justice system. They have 50 professors on the faculty that specialize in all aspects of North Carolina law and government.

When I was a magistrate, Professor Robert Farb headed their criminal justice department. Farb was the definitive expert on all North Carolina criminal statutes and legal procedures. I attended continuing education workshops where Professor Farb would analyze case studies and specific elements of a criminal statute in unbelievable detail. If a magistrate had a question about a current case or charge, Professor Farb and his colleagues were just a phone call away.

That is also the case when it comes to operating a municipal government in North Carolina. Town directors are only a phone call away from consulting with experts in specific fields such as municipal finance, meeting procedures, open records, zoning, or personnel, to name only a few.

I jokingly told Dean Smith that my goal has always been to make good decisions. The last thing a mayor or magistrate wants to be is a case study for the UNC School of Government. He laughed.

At the workshop I also spoke with Rose Vaughn Williams, the legislative representative for the NC League of Municipalities. The league is also a major source of support for towns and cities. Rose informed me that she believes the legislature will take action in the forthcoming short session on short-term rentals and on fiber/broadband legislation. Her only caveat was that no one can predict what the NC Legislature will do.

Hope you can join us tonight at 7pm at the Highlands Community Center for the December board meeting. Our new commissioner, Marc Hehn, along with our reelected commissioners Brian Stiehler and John Dotson, will be sworn in. I also want to thank outgoing Commissioner Eric Pierson for his many years of service on the board.

By the way, the newly sworn commissioners will have to take a two-hour course on ethics and conflicts of interest. This extensive course is put on by the University of North Carolina School of Government.

Warm up to Good Times!
Book a private cooking class with Rachel at the Spice & Tea Exchange shop. Get a group together and come ready for fun, good food and laughs!
I heard someone say the following words recently: “I never expected that from her.” I won’t provide context, but hearing the words caused me to smile.

Humans are the only creatures in the natural world who have expectations, of themselves and of others. Expectations of one’s self is probably not a bad thing. It allows us to set goals, to establish priorities in our lives, and to experience the feeling of satisfaction at accomplishing something.

Imposing expectations on others, whether verbalized or kept to one’s self, is a recipe for, at best disappointment, and at worst, resentment.

I’ve voiced this to people at one time or another and have been greeted with skepticism. “How can you not have expectations of others?”

Simple. It’s a conscious decision I make in order to reduce the incidence of either disappointment or resentment in my life.

When I was running my business, I held semi-annual meetings with each of my teammates (I didn’t refer to them as employees or subordinates) to establish parameters by which each would be evaluated. I understood that these mutually agreed-upon goals and standards of performance could be interpreted as expectations, but for me they were just what the words implied. This can feel like hair splitting but stay with me.

There’s a psychology to having expectations of others. For some, it’s difficult to let go of the idea that expecting something to happen will actually make it happen. I expect it to rain today therefore it will rain today. If things play out as expected, would I experience happiness that my expectation was met? Or, will I feel disappointment because it rained? It’s not the thought that’s the problem. It’s the expectation flowing from the thought.

When my daughters were young I told them, literally all the time, if they applied themselves they would get excellent grades. I never expected them to achieve at a certain grade level. Grades weren’t something over which they had any true control. Teachers dealt out grades, and teachers being members of the human race could decide that simply applying one’s self wasn’t enough to merit an A. Additionally, scholastic achievement is individual in nature. Some students are capable of doing extremely well in some subjects but not necessarily in others. I believe when parents arbitrarily demand a certain level of performance from a child they’re setting themselves up for disappointment and could be creating a level of resentment in their children.

Someone I know is a dedicated fan of a certain Major League baseball team. During the off-season, the team made a couple of trades and free-agent acquisitions, leading this person to expect improved performance in the division standings. It didn’t happen. His expectations were crushed due to things occurring beyond the scope of the off-season activities.

We – pretty much all of us – hold unspoken if not unconscious expectations regarding a wide range of things.

“Take this pill and you’ll lose weight.”

We take the pill, but we don’t lose weight because we didn’t change our eating habits.

“This film is filled with Oscar-worthy performances.” We watch the film but leave the theater disappointed because the script was weak.

“Vote for me and I’ll do this, that or something else.” We do, but he doesn’t, because he didn’t understand the limitations of his position.

In all of these admittedly manufactured examples we were asked to accept a premise over which we had no control.

The only things about which we should ever consider holding any expectations are instances where we can control the outcome.

We’re conditioned by life experience to hold at least some expectations, such as clean water when we turn the faucet, or light when we flip a switch on a wall. Honesty when we hear words from someone who has sought our trust.

Sometimes, not having expectations can result in a happy experience. That walk in the woods you didn’t particularly want to take suddenly produced an encounter with a small family of deer.

Other times, having expectations can lead to crushing disappointment, or worse.

Some people are simply incapable of not holding others to unrealistic expectations. I feel for them, for they are certain to experience consistent disappointment. Those who can accept others as they are and as they do, will, I believe, enjoy a less frustrating life.

It’s okay to impose expectation on yourself, when you’re capable of controlling an outcome. As far as expectations of others, do so at your own risk.

National Theatre of London’s
‘Small Island’ via satellite at PAC Dec. 14

The Highlands Performing Arts Center will present the National Theatre of London’s production of Small Island on Saturday, December 14 at 1 PM. Andrea Levy’s Orange Prize-winning novel Small Island comes to life in an epic new theatre adaptation. Small Island embarks on a journey from Jamaica to Britain, through the Second World War to 1948—the year the HMT Empire Windrush docked at Tilbury. The play follows three intricately connected stories. Hortense yearns for a new life away from rural Jamaica, Gilbert dreams of becoming a lawyer, and Queenie longs to escape her Lincolnshire roots. Hope and humanity meet stubborn reality as the play traces the tangled history of Jamaica and the UK. Small Island is BBFC rated 15 due to use of strong language. As part of depicting the experience of Jamaican immigrants to Britain after the Second World War, at times characters in the play use language which is racially offensive. Tickets are available online: www.highlandspacec.org or www.highlandsperformingarts.com or at the door. Highlands Performing Arts Center, 507 Chestnut Street, Highlands NC.

In this season of Thanksgiving I have enormous gratitude that I am an American. I am grateful that we live in a democracy and I can voice my opinions to my elected Representatives and Senators in Congress.

We are in grave serious times, as our Congress considers the options and consequences of impeachment. Despite President Trump’s appeals to read the transcript of his phone call with Ukraine’s President Zelensky, many people have not read it. Perhaps by having it readily available here, you will read it, critically analyze its content, come to your own conclusions and communicate your thoughts to Rep. Mark Meadows, Sen. Richard Burr, and Sen. Thom Tillis.

Further, I hope readers will participate in a respectful exchange of views through Letters-to-the-Editor and in-person conversations.

I realize this is a hectic and demanding time of the year. But surely our country deserves our thoughtful scrutiny of the President’s ability to lead us forward as the United States of America. – Jane Jerry the town’s rights-of-way – which offered a smorgasbord of edibles – were replaced with commercial-grade bear-resistant toters.

The town purchased 350 commercial bear-resistant toters at $373.06 each for a total of $130,571 and began replacing dumpsters with them last week.

The toters are 96-gallons, are double-walled and they have a seal around the lid. The monthly toter rental rate is the same as the current dumpster rate of $6.35 per month.

“The toters are for rent not for sale, but if a business owner wants to purchase their own toter, it must be certified bear-resistant, must be no greater than 100 gallons, and must have wheels and a lift bar, in order to be dumped by the sanitation truck,” said Town Manager Josh Ward.

The bear-proof receptacles have done their job. Compared to last year, few bears have been seen in the commercial district and the town hopes the removal of dumpsters whose lids were often left open will further deter bears and other animals and birds from feasting on garbage.

“The B.E.A.R. Task Force is extremely pleased that the mayor and commissioners of Highlands have taken the steps they have,” said Cynthia Strain. “From what I hear, there are far fewer bears roaming around downtown, and that is significant. Bears aren’t all that dangerous, but when you have them walking around downtown and parks where people and dogs hang out, there is greater potential for a negative interaction to occur. So now it is safer for everyone, including the bears.”

Though the process of removing the dumpsters and replacing them with bear-resistant toters has been reviewed for the past several months, Mayor Pat Taylor said some in the commercial district were surprised when the dumpsters were removed.

“This plan, and the reason for it, was covered in the news media on numerous occasions. The plan was reviewed several times and approved by the Town Board. It was not an overnight, or a behind closed doors decision,” he said. “The removal of shared dumpsters was a part of the town’s effort to address the growing problem of bears scattering garbage in the business districts.”

Taylor said the businesses that were using dumpsters were provided with state-of-the-art bear resistant-toters. Instead of paying a dumpster rental fee, these businesses now pay a toter-rental fee. Businesses that can accommodate a dumpster on their property can continue to use a dumpster.

The other day I was listening to that great Joni Mitchell song, “Both Sides, Now,” which for some reason almost always prompts deep reflection. This time, however, it produced more of a chuckle as I thought about the irony of my new career path. The first 25 years of my working life were spent in banking during which I relocated 10 times. I was no stranger to working with real estate agents as we bought and sold homes and investment properties (painfully, 23 at last count). The irony that I referenced earlier stems from the fact that over the years I had developed mixed feelings about the real estate profession... and now here I sit beginning my new career as a Realtor. Indeed, I am seeing the real estate profession... and now here I sit.

Don’t get me wrong, I have had the pleasure of working with some great brokers, and it was those experiences that opened my eyes to what a difference the right partner can make. So, in my Joni Mitchell induced state of reflection, I began to give deeper thought to what had shaped my perceptions and what lessons learned I could carry forward into my new career. Here is what I came up with:

My best experiences came from working with professionals who put the client first. They actively listened to understand, asked thoughtful questions, and kept any personal agenda out of sight. They remained calm during negotiations, helped me remain focused on the desired outcome (particularly when I was fixated on inspection report issues), and never infused drama into the situation or grandstanded for their own benefit. They behaved in a way that reflected that they were working for me, had time for me, and appreciated the business.

Looking back, the brokers that I respected the most were those who promoted themselves in a way that elevated the entire profession. They avoided the temptation of sharing negative outlooks on peers as a means of self-promotion. As I now reflect on my experiences as a client, I realize that most of my negative perceptions came from unfavorable things that one Realtor said about another, not from bad experiences that I had personally.

Like many clients, my internal guidance system can malfunction when I become distracted by the charm and character of a home. Caught up in the excitement, I often found myself willing to cast aside the rest of my criteria. Having a broker to help keep me on track was always of great value. Hearing the words “So I can tell you love this house, let’s see how it lines up with what you said you want” would usually bring me back to my senses.

Though sometimes I would ultimately decide that emotion should triumph over logic, I really appreciated a professional who helped keep me on track and make sure that my decisions were thoughtful and deliberate.

Last, but not least, the professionals that left the most lasting impressions were those who came prepared, had recommendations which were backed up by data and analysis. For most of us, real estate transactions are the largest financial commitments we will undertake during our lifetime. We should expect to work with partners who bring the same degree of market knowledge and analytical skills to real estate investments as we would expect from any other investment professional.

I am very excited about my new career and am thankful for the lessons learned from my time on both sides, now.

Wishing everyone Happy Holidays and a Prosperous New Year.

my head. The car was so damaged, I was terrified of how I would find them.

When I opened the ambulance door, I saw my niece. She had a few scratches on her cheek from the broken glass from the back windshield, but otherwise she was safe. And that is when it hit me. She was safe because her Graco five-point harness saved her life. Had she been in a booster seat, or had the seat not been properly installed, there is no question she would have been seriously injured in that horrific accident. But she wasn't. A man passing by shortly after the accident jumped into the river and cut the seatbelt that was holding her into the car. She was dangling upside down in the car, but the five-point harness of her seat kept her secured. He carried her out of the creek, still fully secured in her car seat.

As her aunt, I am beyond grateful for the string of events that kept her safe that day, as a car seat technician, I know it was no coincidence. As a petite four-year-old, my sister had made the right decision of keeping Wren in a five-point harness car seat. That means on impact, there were five-points of impact that lessened the injury across her body and helped absorb the impact during the accident. Had my sister made the mistake, which is all too common, of transitioning Wren to a booster seat too early, we would not have had the same outcome. The car seat was properly installed inside the car. It's also secured with a seatbelt, which was locked, which kept it secured against the seat of the car even though the car was flipped upside down. The straps were snug against Wren's body, and the harness was by her armpits, which ensured that her little body didn’t slip out while it dangled upside down. All things I have preached and scolded and annoyed my sisters to do for their children, and even strangers to do for theirs… while they seem nit picky or aggravating at the time, in the event of an accident those are the very things that will save a child’s life, as they did for my niece on Friday.

My mother was also able to walk away from the accident with a minor concussion and a few scratches, undoubtedly because her seatbelt also kept her safe.

Car seat safety is something that you never think you need it… until you do. That is why as Chairman of Safe Kids Macon County, I have worked with incredible volunteers to grow the list of local technicians available to check your child’s car seat for free at any time. If you haven’t had your seat check, please do so today. Christmas time is a heavy travel season and ensuring your child is in the right seat, and the seat is properly installed could mean the difference in life and death.

To have your child’s seat checked, contact the Macon County Sheriff’s Annex, the Franklin Police Department, or the Highlands Police Department, the Franklin Fire Department, or the Otto Fire Department, all of which have made it a priority to have certified car seat technicians on staff to help.

Advent marks the very beginning of the Christian year and is a season in which Christians are offered one of the greatest gifts of all - the gift of time. Time for us to both individually and collectively prepare for the coming of Christ. During this time of preparation God’s people are invited to consider a wide and comprehensive understanding of the season - a posture which considers three distinct “moments” of Christ’s arrival in the world.

First, we are asked to remember the historical arrival of Christ at Christmas over 2,000 years ago and Israel’s great longing for something - or maybe more precisely someone - who would change everything - someone who would fulfill the prophetic vision that longed for an end to slavery, dreamed of reconciliation, and hoped for a return home.

Second, we look with great hope, during this season of expectation, for God’s ever renewing presence in the world and the possibility of Christ’s re-birth in our hearts here and now.

Finally, and admittedly a bit jarringly, we look forward to the second Advent of Christ as we faithfully anticipate his coming again in power and great glory - to prayerfully consider the temporal nature of our lives, the destiny of humankind, the return of Christ, and the consummation of the whole created order at the end of time.

Of course, all this preparation requires a good deal of waiting. But waiting is not the kind of thing many of us like to do. We like to have things when we want them and the very idea of waiting can sound, to so many of us, like such a boring and passive way to live in the world. Indeed, many of us would rather just avoid this kind of thing altogether. Instead, we prefer Peach Passes on our cars, two-day Prime shipping from Amazon.com, credit cards that take the waiting out of wanting, and faster and faster internet speeds.

Yet despite our penchant for instant gratification, the season of Advent would have us wait for Christmas. But our waiting has a focus and knowing what exactly it is we are waiting for makes all the difference.

May the gift of Advent, then, be a time of blessing and renewal; a time of expectation and watchfulness; patience that together we may greet our Lord with joy when he comes again in power and great glory.

However, Strain urges business owners to keep the lids latched because bear scat in the area indicates they ingest more than just food – in some cases blue and purple latex gloves.

Mayor Taylor said the removal of dumpsters on Oak Street has improved the appearance of the street.

“In addition, this will hopefully discourage illegal dumping of household trash by some uncaring residents which was an additional problem associated with dumpsters,” she said.

By August 1, 2020 all residential garbage will have to be placed in bear-resistant toters, too. Like the commercial toters, the toters will have to have a lift bar so the toter can be mechanically emptied into the garbage truck.

“An added benefit to this new toter requirement will be the elimination of repetitive lifting of trash cans by sanitation workers, which has led to workmen’s comp issues,” said Taylor.

if the clubs don’t address this soon, I fear that the bears will wind up in those neighborhoods. The idea is to drive the bears back into the woods where they belong, not send them to other neighborhoods,” she said.
