Fire temporarily shuts down Playhouse shows

Theatre-goers for the last week of Oklahoma! at The Highlands Playhouse will see a different backdrop and props for the remaining performances.

Gone are the bales of straw on stage which were used as the barn backdrop.

Highlands Fire & Rescue received a call at 9:22 a.m. Sunday morning for a structure fire next door at the Highlands Playhouse located at 362 Oak Street, which is between the HFR and the Highlands Police department.

Playhouse Artistic Director Bill Patti was on a phone call in the parking lot when he saw smoke coming from the building to the rear of the Box Office and immediately called 911.

"The set is going to be rather conceptual," said Playhouse Director Lance Matzke. "I'm grateful we're dealing with such an experienced, close-knit cast because it's really going to allow them to shine, and our performance is going to rely on their strengths as actors

Legislators support funding for unique K-12 schools

By Brittney Lofthouse

For years, legislators in Western North Carolina have worked to secure funding for Nantahala and Highlands Schools due to how isolated they are from the rest of the county. Both schools are K-12 schools and cost a significant amount more in operational costs than schools in the Franklin area. Past legislators were unsuccessful year after year, until Representative Kevin Corbin took office.

Rep. Corbin ran on the promise of working on behalf of Highlands and Nantahala Schools to get the state to allocate more funding for the unique geography of Macon County, and he was successful. With the help of Senator Jim Davis, during Corbin's first term in the House of Representatives he was able to get the state to approve $1 million in recurring funds for Macon County to offset the operational costs associated with both schools.

During this legislative term, Corbin has been working with Bobby Hanig, who represents Currituck County to get nearly identi-

Chamber proposes 'lighting up' downtown

Wrapping 24 trees on Main Street with white, LED lights, seven months of the year was proposed by Chamber of Commerce representatives at the July 18 Town Board meeting.

The agenda item was listed as "Chamber of Commerce Holiday Lighting Proposal" but it entailed more than that.

Chamber chair Hilary Wilkes and Kay Craig suggested the 24 trees on two blocks of Main from 5th to 3rd streets, including the end-cap trees, be wrapped — trunks and limbs — with lights turned on dusk to dawn or some specific timeframe, October until just after Easter.

They showed a quick video of lighted trees along a street that

There are potential changes coming to residential trash pickup

I have been asked why the town wants to change the way residential garbage is collected. The old adage, "if it ain't broke, don't fix it," has been invoked. My response is that the way we collect trash is broken and out of date.

Highlands Mayor Patrick Taylor

OSHA reports that 46,000 janitors, custodians and sanitation workers are injured each year. The vast majority are back injuries, and about 60% result from lifting garbage cans. These workers have 16th highest rate of occupational hazards. The average cost for these injuries, including medical treatment and lost time on the job is over $60,000 per case.

I've had several people tell me I shouldn't discuss this problem because our workers will start filling claims. It would be morally wrong to not address this health and safety issue for our sanitation workers, just as if we ignored the potential health issues of firefighters exposed to toxic chemicals. As a community we have to take action and implement best practices.

Also, our workers are already at times injured on the job. Those injuries cost the town money in medical treatment and the loss of productivity and work time.

Specifically, the procedure we have in place where our sanitation workers lift 35-gallon, or larger, trash cans when doing residential pickup is exactly what concerns OSHA. One worker may lift hundreds of trash cans on any day. We have about 2,000 residential customers that get two pickups a week. This repetitive lifting adds up to a heavy burden for our workers.

Our garbage trucks are equipped with lift bar devices. They are used for lifting the 95-gallon totes deployed in commercial districts. The next step is to move toward using toters in residential areas. The wheel toters and lift bar devices will make it much easier for our workers to deposit the trash in the trucks. Almost all toters are designed to work with the universal lift bar system. The use of toters is a standard operating procedure in sanitation departments across the country.

If we convert to toters that are bear-resistant, another important issue of better managing wildlife will also be addressed. These bear-resistant toters are more costly than standard toters, but they are also built stronger to withstand the assault by a hungry bear. I have looked at bear resistant-toters on the Internet. Most vendors sell 64- and 95-gallon toters. Prices range from $200 to $300 plus. Some folks may say they are too expensive. My response is that handling and disposing of trash on the plateau is not a cheap operation and with a bear-resistant toter people won't have to pick up messes left by bears who get into traditional garbage cans.

The public works committee will be researching and reviewing how to address both of these issues. Questions of how, and when we implement these new residential practices will have to be answered. The cost and how and who will pay for the conversion will also need to be determined. There are a number of options to be decided, but to do nothing is not an option.

the company who would do the work “We Hang Christmas Trees” did elsewhere.

Wilkes said one of the Chamber’s goals is to make the experience of visitors as heightened as possible while they are here.

“Throughout the country small towns use lights during all times of year to make guests feel welcome and they create an ambiance in the downtown area which encourages folks to stick around, relax, maybe walk around after dinner and make use of the Main Street area,” she said.

Craig said she has heard from a lot of people Highlands is dreary after the Christmas lights are taken down.

“With the lights, when folks come here in February, March, and January and they are pulling into town, even though its 6 o’clock at night instead of pitch black what they would be coming into is something lit up, more welcoming,” said Wilkes. “It may help with commerce, but this is really just to provide ambiance for our downtown area. If we like it, we can look at going up and down 4th street toward the park.”

Wilkes said she doesn’t want the moniker “holiday lights” attached to the proposal because it’s more a “fall and winter lighting” proposal.

She said the Chamber board has already approved this as an expenditure. “We Hang Christmas Lights” has proposed $30,700, to install the lights, check them once a month, maintain them and take them down.

“What we seek from the town is the electrical piece of this – making sure we have access to power and for the town to also pay the power bill,” said Wilkes.

Wilkes said they wanted approval from the Town Board that night, because “We Hang Christmas Lights” has to start preparing lights tomorrow.”

She said then the company needs three to four weeks to get them on every tree by late August early September so they are ready for the fall season, the first of October. They would be taken down just after Easter – this year April 19; that would give the trees four or five months to grow before the lights are put on again.

She said people have asked if the town’s traditional colored lights would still be up during the holidays to provide a distinction but she said she didn’t know if it’s possible with the lights planned for the project, or if there is a need for the colored holiday lights.

“It seems like we would have enough decoration with the wreaths around town,” she said.

Wilkes said they hadn’t discussed the logistics of the project with anyone at the town level. Mayor Pat Taylor said a lot of questions needed to be answered including the feasibility. Public Works Director/Town Engineer Lamar Nix, who was not at the meeting, would have to be consulted before the project could possibly move forward, he said.

Commission Amy Patterson, John Dotson and Eric Pierson said they weren’t ready to give a blanket “yes” that night.

“I am certainly not prepared to approve this tonight because that [the video] was too gaudy. Every one of those trees had soooo many lights on them. That to me doesn’t look like Highlands at all. It looks like Las Vegas or something,” she said. “There is a lot of light pollution, too. I like our dark skies so you can actually see the stars.”

Craig and Wilkes both said the video depicted a street with many more trees than Highlands and Highlands’ trees are much more spread out.

Wilkes said timers could be considered – with the lights coming on at dusk and going off at 11 p.m.

“There are considerations. We want to make sure it’s tasteful and not overly done but that it will create a night glow when people are milling about right after dinner and window shopping,” she said. “When people arrive in town at 5 or 6 on a Friday for a winter weekend and it’s dark it’s hard to tell what’s open or if anything is happening. We want the lights to be part of the atmosphere in town without taking away from the beautiful nature of our town. And yes, light pollution has come up ... but timers and the percentage of lights can be discussed.”

Commissioner Pierson said first up Nix had to be in the mix.

“I would hate to say yes to this and find out the town has to spend thousands to make it happen,” he said. This is just very new to us and we haven’t seen anything about

On July 20, 1969, the astronaut Neil Armstrong became the first human being to walk on another world, famously marking the moment with the phrase: "That's one small step for [a] man, one giant leap for mankind."

Remembering the 50th anniversary of America's first step on the moon

By Curtis Fussell

Co-pastor First Presbyterian Church

It may come as a surprise to learn the story about the first liquid and food consumed on the moon. We just celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of humans walking on the moon with the landing of Apollo 11. It happened on July 20, 1969. On that day, history was made when the first human beings walked on the surface of the moon.

But it might surprise you to hear what Buzz Aldrin did before he and Neil Armstrong exited the Lunar Module and set foot on the moon: Buzz Aldrin took communion on the surface of the moon.

The background to the story is that Buzz Aldrin was an elder at Webster Presbyterian Church in Webster, Texas at this time in his life. Being a person of faith and knowing that he would soon be doing something unprecedented in human history, he felt that he should somehow mark the occasion. He asked his minister to help him and so the minister consecrated a communion wafer and a small vial of communion wine. Aldrin then received special permission to take the wafer and wine with him on the lunar mission.

Aldrin and Armstrong had to wait more than an hour before stepping out on the lunar surface. During that time, when Aldrin made the following public statement:

"This is the LM (Lunar Module) pilot. I'd like to take this opportunity to ask every person listening in, whoever and wherever they may be, to pause for a moment and contemplate the events of the past few hours and to give thanks in his or her own way." He then ended radio communication, and there, on the silent surface of the moon, 250,000 miles from home, he took communion.

Here is his account of what happened: "In the radio blackout, I opened the little plastic packages which contained the bread and the wine. I poured the wine into the chalice our church had given me. In the one-sixth gravity of the moon, the wine slowly curled and gracefully came up the side of the cup. On a three-by-five card on which I had written the scripture, I read out loud: 'I am the vine, you are the branches. Whosoever abides in me will bring forth much fruit ... Apart from me you can do nothing (John 15:5).'

"I ate the tiny wafer and swallowed the wine. I gave thanks for the intelligence and spirit that had brought two young pilots to the Sea of Tranquility. It was interesting for me to think that the very first liquid ever poured on the moon and the very first food eaten there were the communion elements." Armstrong looked on quietly and respectfully; but he did not participate in the ritual.

Later, Aldrin hinted that he could have been more inclusive:

"Perhaps, if I had it to do over again, I would not choose to celebrate communion. Although it was a deeply meaningful experience for me, it was a Christian sacrament, and we had come to the moon in the name of all mankind – be they Christians, Jews, Muslims, animists, agnostics, or atheists. But at the time I could think of no better way to acknowledge the enormity of Apollo 11 experience than be giving thanks to God. It was my hope that people would keep the whole event in their minds and keep and see... a deeper meaning -a challenge, and the human need to explore whatever is above us, below us, or out there."

To this day, Webster Presbyterian church celebrates a Lunar Communion Sunday every July. The church also has in its possession the chalice that Aldrin took with him to the moon.

and musicians. While the fire has certainly presented a challenge to us, our goal is to get up and running as quickly as possible and continue the momentum we've been building this season. After all, the show must go on!"

According to Fire Marshal Jimmy Teem, the cause of the fire was spontaneous combustion of bales of straw that were in the storage building adjacent to the Playhouse.

Teem said the bales of straw which were being used as backdrop props on the stage for Oklahoma! inside the Playhouse and extra bales being stored in the building had been treated for bugs with a borax and water solution, which in itself is OK.

"They sprayed the bales to get rid of the insects and that's fine, but then they put them back in the storage building while they were still wet. This caused them to build heat - just like if wet or green hay is put in a barn. They would have had to let them dry out completely before storing them."

Teem said the bales put back on the stage didn't ignite because the building is air-conditioned so it was a different environment.

However, he issued a fire-code violation because bales of straw can easily ignite with a spark from an outlet or any number of things, he said.

"That building isn't sprinkled and it's very old. All that's needed is a good spark to start a fire, so bales of straw aren't allowed in there," he said.

Even if the building was "sprinkled" he said bales of hay would have had to be treated with some kind of flame retardant prior to being used.

He ordered the power turned off in the building Sunday which shut down Sunday's matinee production as well as the movie set for later that afternoon and evening. He allowed the power to be turned back on around 2:30 p.m. Monday after all the bales were removed and a punch list he left previously was completed.

No one was in the building at the time of the fire and there were no injuries.

The out-building to the rear of the campus is used to store set equipment and wardrobe, and after inspection appears to be structurally sound.

"There's some smoke and heat damage, but the structure was mostly metal so there's not much damage there," said Highlands Fire & Rescue Chief Gearhart. "It was mostly content damage."

HFR Firefighter and Town Commissioner Eric Pierson was the first on the scene and said the source was easy to locate upon entering the building.

"Right when I walked in, the fire source was easy to spot in a back corner," said Pierson. "But moving through the dark there was zero visibility and we had to go through all the clutter to get to the flames, then we just put it out with a hose."

Playhouse staff walked through the theater portion of the Playhouse to check on the stacks of straw bales that were on stage. Besides a slight odor of smoke, the stage appeared unscathed.

Matzke said the metal out-building will probably not be used again. If anything, it'll be completely stripped to just a shell, he said.

Cashiers-Glenville Volunteer Fire Department was also on scene providing support as is policy with structure fires.

•WORD MATTER•

The word for today is friendship

For a long time I've pondered the idea of friendship.

I've been unable to attribute this particular reference to any particular person, but we've likely all heard that people come into your life for a reason, a season, or a lifetime. Of course, not all of them become, depending upon your definition, a friend.

Bud Katz

the designation, friend? Sometimes, perhaps. For a while, perhaps. But to me the notion of these kinds of transactional relationships doesn't rise to the level of true friendship.

We have people at work with whom we are amiable, but does the relationship extend beyond work? Will we introduce these folks to our families? Will we travel with them? Will we

But, therein lies the rub: what is your definition of a friend?

I've conducted some informal polling on this question, and I can tell you there is no single, universally accepted definition. My old pal, Webster, says a friend is a person whom one knows and with whom one has a bond of mutual affection, typically exclusive of sexual or family relations.

Now, that definition doesn't apply universally because many people will argue that a sibling, a spouse, even a child can certainly be a friend. I consider my wife my best friend. And I believe, at least most of the time, she shares this sentiment.

That digital scourge, Facebook, has corrupted the entire notion of friendship. First of all, they turned a noun into a verb, and that, by itself, is a source of head-shaking frustration for people who respect the American version of the English language. People on Facebook brag about having thousands of "friends." Please. Anyone, other than perhaps a precocious six-year-old, who claims to have beyond a tiny handful of close friends probably has none at all.

So, how do people – how do you – define this amorphous concept of who is a "friend?"

One guy I know told me a true friend is someone who will bail you out of jail, give you an airtight alibi, and never ask you what you did. No argument here.

A woman I asked told me her definition of a true friend is the one person with whom she can laugh or cry. I like that.

I believe we exist within some complex Venn diagram, where we have people with whom we engage, with some degree of regularity, in a specific activity; that's a reason; or for a period of time. That's a season. The quilting circle. The bowling league. But, do the relationships achieve a level of intimacy or continuity deserving of share, not gossip, but real, significant, honest, joys, fears and regrets with them? Will we show them our authentic selves? Will we take long, quiet walks with them and be able to stand the silence, and just bask in their presence?

Speaking personally, I believe the "friend playing field" is not a level one. I believe the friendship dynamic is different for men and for women, for children and adults, for straight and gay people, and, I believe the rules can be adapted based on one's cultural identity.

I believe proximity matters, but not always. I believe frequency of interaction matters, but not entirely. I believe the depth of interaction matters, but not exclusively. Don't we all have people who don't necessarily share our demographic profile, our ZIP code, our politics, our faith, even our gender, with whom we share a certain level of history, commonality of values, and just enjoy being around?

If we do, and, if we're smart, we treasure those folks.

I don't have any empirical evidence for these beliefs. I've lived for a while. I've considered the complex notion of friendship for a while. I don't use the word flippantly.

I doubt I'd be able to ask most folks with whom I'm friendly to bail me out of jail and I wouldn't expect a single one of them to provide me with an alibi.

Lincoln asked, "Do I not destroy my enemies when I make them my friends?" Finding common ground on which to stand, together, is a great first step to friendship.

My own definition is also attributable to someone unknown. "A true friend understands your past, believes in your future, and values you just the way you are." If I count my best friend, the one with whom I wake every day, I have two such people in my life.

And two true friends, at least to me, are definitely enough.

Health tips from Princess Puddin'

As I stand on Mum's desk chair typing this column on her keyboard, it's only fitting that she's here in the office huffing and puffing through a workout with her exercise ball and weights. Once she's finished with her ball wall squats, situps, bicep curls, and such, she'll want her computer back so I need to hustle. It's possible she'll decide to add a walk to today's workout, but you never know.

My health routine combines huffing and puffing with relaxation techniques and doesn't involve props. Some might say I lean more to the stress relief side of the equation, but I also find time to exert myself daily.

I was prompted to write about this topic when I read a column in our local paper: "Bird-watching might mean better health, less stress." Humans are so funny. They had to conduct a study to establish this fact, while we kitties have long known about the health benefits of bird-watching.

I will grant you that my kitty friends who go outside sometimes do a bit more than watch, as in chase a bird here and there. Me? Confined to the indoors, I either watch the Outdoor Channel from the kitchen and living room windows or in warmer weather from the screened porch. It's Dad's responsibility to keep all bird feeders stocked so that I have entertainment in living color — bluebirds, cardinals, goldfinches, you name it.

The study conducted by the University of Exeter in Great Britain "[f]ound mental health benefits — less stress anxiety and depression — when people can see birds shrubs and trees around their homes." Well, duh! "The researchers conclude: 'Birds around the home, and nature, in general, show great promise in preventative health care ...'"

I, being the intelligent kitty I am, try to begin every day watching the birds. It's my Ohm moment, followed occasionally by a calm purring spell in Mum's lap as she drinks coffee. At some point thereafter, I stretch and then dash upstairs to do my sprint workout. Mum and Dad wonder why I seem only to sprint upstairs, not downstairs. Isn't it obvious? I have an uninterrupted running track from the far wall of the guest bedroom, down the hall, all the way through Dad's office — from one end of the house to the other.

I sprint back and forth over and over, while my parents are downstairs laughing at the sound of "dunt, da-dunt, da-dunt, da-dunt." With that routine complete, I choose between napping on Mum and Dad's bed or getting several treats in the office — when Mum is available to place them in my cute kitty treat dish, that is.

My interval workout along with leaping atop tables, beds, and the backs of couches keeps me in super aerobic shape; and my relaxation routines like bird-watching, meditating on Mum's yoga block, and of course, napping ensure I'm stress-free. Mum has a lovely purple yoga block I'm partial to. I fold my paws on it and close my eyes just like a yogi.

Mum practiced yoga for years but gave it up when her long-time yoga teacher quit. She said it was her only calm time of the week because she focused solely on holding her poses without interference from a gazillion thoughts. Personally, I think she could benefit from finding a new teacher. Barring that, she could assume the lotus position and join me as I meditate. Repeat after me ... Ohm.

Dreaded 'due diligence'

We are so busy right now and real estate is "hot" in Highlands and Cashiers! But there is one thing that really frustrates us and complicates our job as brokers. And I refer to it as "dreaded due diligence!"

When we write an offer, the contract allows for due diligence which is basically an investigation period. If you are a broker on the seller's side of a real estate transaction this is a nightmare for many reasons.

When North Carolina replaced the inspection clause in our offer-to-purchase and contract a few years ago followed by a date for repair requests, the number of offers written and subsequently terminated increased dramatically! Let me explain.

Pat Allen, BIC
Pat Allen Realty Group
Cell: 828-200-9179

It used to be that buyers requested an inspection as soon as we, the brokers, could get an appointment – usually within two weeks. Then we, being brokers, would fill out a repair request asking for some or all repairs to be done before closing. Another option was a credit at closing for an estimated cost of repairs. An agreement was signed by the buyers and sellers and we headed to closing.

The current situation is that buyers ask for a certain number of days for due diligence – typically we see 21 -45 days, depending on the time frame required to get an inspection, survey, or contractor to estimate costs to remodel.

This may seem reasonable to a buyer, but the clincher is that up until 5 p.m. on the final day of due diligence the buyer can terminate for ANY or NO reason and receive their earnest money back.

This has ultimately taken the home off the market and then when it shows active again in MLS (our multiple listing service), brokers and potential buyers are curious why it fell through and are likely to believe there is a major problem with the house. Most times this is not the case. Some buyers simply change their minds...this is certainly not fair to sellers.

Meanwhile, brokers need to tell their sellers not to start packing or arrange a move until "dreaded" due diligence is up! It slows down everything and sellers must play the "wait and see" game. I always feel terrible having to call a seller and tell them the buyers terminated -- and many times with no valid reason.

I urge buyers' brokers to explain due diligence at length and make it for the shortest days possible. I also encourage buyers to understand they are taking someone's home off the market and that time is of the essence. If they don't terminate before 5 p.m. on the last day of due diligence the contact goes to pending and their earnest money is forfeited. At that point everyone hates "dreaded" due diligence!

this prior to tonight's meeting. Lamar has to look at this from an electrical standpoint."

Commissioner Dotson agreed on both counts and said the town also has a holiday lighting ordinance and its likely it would have to change for the chamber's proposal to happen.

Town Attorney JK Coward said the ordinance may have to change because the lighting involves "land use" which would require a public hearing prior to an ordinance amendment.

Commissioner Patterson said she also wanted more citizen input not just recommendations from committees.

Wilkes said the chamber has gotten great response from the business owners and "public comment" would be good to hear before the Town Board ultimately votes.

Wilkes reiterated that the purpose is to create an atmosphere of energy, and of things going on so people are encouraged to use the sidewalks at night.

"We thought, in lieu of just holiday time, let's really try to help our businesses throughout the winter and in particular keep people downtown – make people want to be downtown – even though it's so dark and foggy sometime."

She said the issue is time-sensitive but the chamber wants to do it right and with the blessing of the town.

"We clearly can't do it without your blessing, and we want everybody to get their questions answered," she said.

Commissioner Patterson said there is a huge spectrum from what she saw on the video and what could be done.

"And I don't know where that is. For me anyway, it would be hard to just give a blank 'yes' and say, 'do whatever you want to do.' We need a concrete proposal about what can and can't be done from Lamar. Plus, our Christmas lights will be going up during the holiday season and they will be using our power."

In the end, Mayor Taylor said the series of events leading up to a vote would be a Public Works Committee meeting with Nix, a discussion at the Planning Board as to appearance, which could also mean a recommended verbiage amendment to the ordinance which would require an advertised public hearing prior to a vote from the Town Board.

The Highlands-Cashiers Chamber Music Festival continues on July 26th-29th in Highlands on Friday and Sunday evenings at the Performing Arts Center and in Cashiers on Saturday and Monday evenings at the Albert Carlton Library. The weekend begins with Festival favorites Vega String Quartet, the Gary Motley Trio and pianist Fei-Fei presenting "Jazz Meets Classics: Impressions and Reflections" on the 26th and 27th. This inspired program offers "reflections" by Debussy and Ravel and "impressions" in the form of piano improvisations and jazz works. On July 28th and 29th the Solera String Quartet and pianist Norman Krieger will make their Festival debuts with works by Beethoven and Brahms.

The Vega String Quartet, Quartet-in-Residence at Emory University, is creating and cultivating a new generation of passionate chamber music lovers and has developed innovative programs with other art forms including dance, painting, poetry and theatre. Jazz pianist Gary Motley will dazzle with solo improvisations as well as join bassist Kenny Davis and Winard Harper on drums as the Gary Motley Trio. Juilliard-trained Fei-Fei was a top finalist at the 14th Van Cliburn International Piano competition and continues to impress audiences across the globe.

cal legislation passed to help small schools on the Eastern part of the state – specifically the only other K-12 school in the state which is in Currituck County. There are three.

House Bill 96 and House Bill 97 easily passed through committee in the house of representatives and were sent to the floor for a vote.

Rep. Corbin not only served as a primary sponsor for the legislation, he also lended the language of the bill that secured funding for Macon County for HB 96 and Currituck County.

“Our districts may be 600 miles apart, from the mountains of Western North Carolina to the sea along the Outer Banks, but we face the same issues in terms of geographical challenges,” said Rep. Corbin. “I am proud to be able to help my fellow House representatives fight for public education within our state.”

HB 96 would essentially require the state to allot funding for additional classroom teachers to the geographically isolated K-12 school in Currituck County, as they did for Macon two years ago.

This would be based on qualifying criteria for geographic isolation, to include schools located in an area containing all or a portion of at least one national wildlife refuge owned by the federal government and managed by the United States Fish & Wildlife Service. If passed this would begin with the 2019-20 school year.

HB 97 addresses transportation issues and would provide Currituck County with additional dollars for school buses due to the terrain along the Outer Banks.

“After seeing how important those additional funds have been for Highlands and Nantahala, it only made sense to address funding gaps on other similarly geographically isolated schools,” said Corbin.

Once the bill clears the House for a vote, it will be sent to the Senate for consideration before adopted.

Good News: You Are Beautiful

Dr. Gary Hewins
Community Bible Church

You can clearly see the beauty of your Lord, though you have never seen Him. You see Him as wonderfully beautiful because you know something of the depth of beauty. Beauty to you, is easily discernable without sight. You know beauty apart from visibility. You can measure your own beauty apart from a mirror, you are the mirror.

In Christ, you know truths many others may never know. You know of the deep reality of a deeper beauty. Before the throne there is a sea of glass, clear as crystal. This sea acts as a mirror reflecting the beauty that cannot be harnessed. In Christ, that beauty is yours as well. You too are a mirror reflecting His beauty. Because of Him, you are beautiful. You radiate beauty in Christ.

You are never more beautiful or never more handsome, before a throne. When you worship in spirit and in truth, you are so truly beautiful. You are lost in a gulf of quintessential beauty and your countenance and your response reflect such beauty.

In Christ, you are beautiful. You see the power of beauty and you see the power in seeing beauty in others. You see others as God sees them and that makes you fascinating. People long for your beauty. People are stirred to jealousy concerning your beauty. Your beauty causes others pause.

The pursuit of vanity has precipitated a deeper longing for beauty. Some seek to purchase beauty; others think beauty is to be flaunted. Their charm is deceptive, and their beauty is fleeting. You, in Christ, in beauty, model a righteous allure.

In Christ, you have an unfading beauty of a gentle and quiet spirit. Your beauty is of great worth to He who created you in His image.

Your image is defined by His beauty.

Your beauty is defined by His image.

He defines you, not anyone else's approval or disapproval. Christ is your Evaluator. Christ is your magnetism. Christ is the Lifter of your head.

Would you wash His feet with your tears? Would you dry His feet with your hair? This is your beauty. Your beauty is laced with selflessness and sacrifice. Your beauty is steeped in anonymity. Your beauty is lasting and brings about lasting effects.

You are beautiful and beautifully made. You were knitted together, even embroidered by the Divine, filled with a beauty for the ages. You are wonderfully made. Your days are ordained for you. Be beautiful in a grotesque world. Be beautiful before the lepers, the orphaned and the fatherless. Be beauty to those engulfed in ugliness. Be beauty to the embittered. Be the reflected beauty necessary in dark seasons of people's lives. Be a beautiful
